Is Feet-washing a Christian Ordinance?

Some time since "a reader" of the COMPANION, affirmed that it is not, but I take the privilege to differ with him, and will give my reasons for so-doing. To be a "Christian Ordinance," it must be an observance commanded by Christ. During the time that Christ was on this earth, as now, there were many great and small, wise and foolish, weak and mighty things on this earth; and in consideration of the great work that Christ was to perform, he, comparatively, "chose the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty," &c. 1st Cor. 1: 27–29. Now as the Reader has acknowledged that feet-washing was one of those things that were in existence when Christ was here, I need not delay on this point, but will try to prove that Christ chose it out of the things of the world, to be observed in his church, by his disciples. Where did Christ institute the things to be observed in his church? It was in the city of Jerusalem, in "a large upper room furnished and prepared." There he instituted the "communion;" and by comparing Matthew 26; Mark 14; Luke 22, and John 13, I learn that he also, there, and then, instituted the "supper" and feet-washing referred to by Paul in his epistle; as well as by John in his gospel. So I find that feet-washing has,— as far as the place, time, and guests are concerned,— the same authority that the communion has. The Reader himself acknowledged this; but he would have us to believe that Christ did not command it to be observed. I will now notice what Christ said about it. After he had washed his disciples' feet he told them, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." I cannot see how the Reader will evade the force of this language, unless he consider ought and should not binding. Webster says, "ought, denotes an obligation of duty." Page 925. And of should, he says, "it also expresses duty, or moral obligation." Page 1213. He further says that "should is every where used in the same connection, and the same senses, as shall, as its imperfect." And of shall, he says that "it ordinarily expresses in the second and third persons, a command, a threat, or a promise." If any doubt the force of ought, let him refer to Matthew 25: 27; and 23: 23. In those instances a solemn wo, or condemnation was pronounced on those who ought to have done things, but left them undone. By referring to Luke 24: 26, and Matthew 16: 21, and comparing the two passages, you will learn how binding Christ considered ought; for he there uses must and ought as synonomous terms, and they must be so, for the German version has must in both passages. How can any sane man honestly say that Christ did not command feet-washing to be observed? But Jesus further says "if I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." But the Reader would have us to observe the difference between this and "If you do not wash one another's feet, you have no part with." Where is the difference? It being proven that Christ commanded feet-washing to be observed, and when the Bible further says that "those who know not God, and OBEY not the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord." But again "he that is washed, needeth not save to wash his feet." Any one who understands language, must know that Christ deemed feet-washing necessary. Not because of filth accumulated on their feet, for he said "ye are clean, but not all;" Judas being excepted. Not his feet, but soul, spirit, and body. In conclusion Jesus says, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." It is with feet-washing, as it is with all other Christian duties; namely, it will depend entirely upon a proper knowledge of its true signification, and cause of observing it, which will secure the blessing. Men might eat bread, and drink wine, both in and out of the church, but if they have not a knowledge of the signification of the bread and wine of the communion, they will never obtain the great spiritual blessing. I will yet notice the objections raised against feet-washing by the Reader, in order "to see the force of the argument on the other side of the question." In the first part of his article he took great pains to prove that it was an "oriental custom," and for that reason objects to it being used as a Christian ordinance now. Let us try his rule in other ordinances. Eating bread and drinking wine was an oriental custom; therefore Christ merely followed an oriental custom, and did not command them to be used to observe a Christian ordinance. With such logic we could reason every ordinance out of the Christian church; but all of us know that it is no true logic. It is true Christ used the bread and wine in a different sense, as he also did feet-washing. He further says, that "if feet-washing was a command that was to be observed by all Christians, Matthew, Mark, and Luke should at least have mentioned it in their writings." He thinks so, but does that prove it to be so? He will have to prove John's testimony false, before this objection will receive the force of an argument; for we have found it as a command in John's testimony. The next objection is a repetition of the first, with a reference to the time of observing feet-washing. As to the time, I too believe that it was in the evening, before the eating of the "supper," and I will add also, before the "communion." Next we hear the Reader affirming "who the persons were that had their feet washed." He says that Mathew, Mark and Luke are more particular in their narratives than John, "for they not only point out the persons, but even specify the number," and just before he intimated, that they had not "mentioned it in their writing." The Reader is right when he affirms that none but the twelve apostle were present when Christ washed feet, but he is badly mistaken when he says, "you have no right to make a congregational practice of it." Now then, Christ commanded the twelve "to wash one another's feet," and afterwards commanded them to teach all disciples, "to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them." Feet-washing too? Yes. Why? Because, "he that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet." The Reader fears that he will be "censured for perverting the scriptures." I think his fears are well founded; for says he "The injunction of the Savior, 'Teaching them,' &c., was given to the eleven apostles; and we must conclude was carried out to its full extent," and then turns right round and declares that none of the apostles has taught feet-washing. Then he says that the apostles, utter silence upon the subject told him at once that it was not considered by them as belonging to the "all things," and then turns again and says that "feet-washing is mentioned in 1 Timothy 5: 10; but then asks, "Shall we consider it as a religious act?" Yes, certainly. "Then bringing up children, &c, must come under the same head." Yes, they are all good works, because they are all commanded. They are all religious acts, but we are not commanded to perform every good work in the public assembly of the church. Christ performed feet-washing at a time, and place, when they were together in a church capacity, and he gave us an example, that we should do as he had done, and by following the example we will follow the good work that the apostle required of the widow referred to in 1 Timothy 5: 10; namely, "If she have washed the saints' feet." The Reader further says that Jesus terms feet-washing "an example and not a command." But Jesus says that he gave us an example, and then gave also the command as we have seen. The Reader concludes that it is not of "much import," and that it "is not profitable when we engage in it," but Jesus says, "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them." We have an instance where one objected to feet-washing, and to him Jesus said, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." He further says, that Paul does not say "one word concerning feet-washing to the brethren in the Corinthian church," and still "he had delivered unto them the ordinances as he had received them from the Lord." The Reader must certainly know that when Paul delivered the ordinances to them was when he preached Christ's gospel to them; but when he wrote the epistles he corrected the many disorders they had gotten into, and added the things that were wanting. The reason he wrote so definitely, concerning the supper and communion was because they had gotten into a great disorder in those things, as all Bible readers know. The passage in 1 Tim. 5: 10 is sufficient proof that Paul did teach it; if not, Paul would have required more of her than the word of God did, and then it would not have been a good work, as Paul calls it. Bringing up children, lodging strangers, washing the saint's feet, relieving the afflicted, &c., are all good works, because, they are commanded by the word of God; and as Paul considered them so he certainly taught them; for says he, "Ye are created in Christ Jesus unto good works," but we must know where they are to be performed, as well as when, and this we have proven by the word of God. At the same place, and time, as that of the communion. Not every word is recorded in the epistolary writings that the apostles preached; therefore there is no proof that they did not preach feet-washing, but there is abundant proof for the contrary, that is, they did.

A few Remarks on Hebrews 7th Chapter.

On page 447, No. 28, present volume, we notice a query asking an explanation on the 7th chapter of Hebrews.

The first question that presents itself is, who was this Melchisedec? All the account we have in the Old Testament is in Genesis 14: 18, 19, and Psalms 110: 4. The Scriptures tell us nothing of his Father or Mother, of his genealogy, of his birth or of his death. He stands alone, without predecessor or successor, a royal priest by the appointment of God; and thus he was a type of Jesus Christ, who was a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, and not after the order of Aaron, whose origin and consecration, life and death are known. It has been a matter of great inquiry among commentators as to who Melchisedec really was. He has been variously supposed to be the Holy Spirit, the Son of God, an angel, Enoch, and Shem the Son of Noah. But it is not probable he should thus change his name; besides, we have no account of his settling in the land of Canaan. And it could not have been Christ; for it seems strange to make Christ a type of himself. We think the safest and most probable opinion is, that which considers him as a righteous and peaceful King, a worshipper of the most high God, in the land of Canaan.

But we shall leave these conjectures, and try to understand, as far as we can, what is said of him by the apostle, and how Christ is represented thereby, in the first three verses of the 7th chapter of Hebrews.

1. Melchisedec was a king, and so is Christ: the government is laid on his shoulders, and he rules over all for the good of his people.

2. He was a King of righteousness. His name signified the righteous King. Christ is a righteous King: righteous in his title, and righteous in his government.

3. He was King of Salem; that is, King of peace. So is our Lord. He is our peace-maker.

4. He was a priest of the most high God, qualified and anointed in a proper manner to be his priest among the Gentiles. So is Christ. He is the priest of the most high God, and the Gentiles must come to God by him. It is only through his priesthood that we can obtain reconciliation and remission of sins.

Third verse, "He was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life." Now this should not be understood according to the letter. The Scripture has chosen to set him forth as an extraordinary person, without giving us his genealogy, that he might be a more fit type of Christ, who, as a man, was without father, as a God, without mother, whose priesthood is without descent—it did not descend to him by another, nor from him to another—but is personal and perpetual.

Now we will refer to Genesis 14: 18, 19. He met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him. So does our Lord meet his people in their spiritual conflicts and refreshes them, renews their strength and blesses them.

Abraham gave him the tenth part of all; that is, as Paul explains it, of all the spoil. This Abraham did either as an expression of his gratitude, or as a testimony of his homage and subjection, or as an offering dedicated to God to be presented by his priest. So are we obliged to make all possible turns of love and gratitude to the Lord; to pay our homage and subjection to him as our King, and to put all our offerings into his hands to be presented by him to the Father.

Next, Melchisedec was made like unto the Son of God—"abideth a priest continually." He bore the image of God in his piety and authority, and stands on record as an immortal high priest, the ancient type of him who is eternal, only begotten of the Father, who abideth a priest forever.

Now in the 4th verse, let us now consider, as the apostle advises, how great Melchisedec was, and how far his priesthood was above that of the order of Aaron. The greatness of this man and his priesthood appears from Abraham paying the tenth of the spoils unto him; and in the 9 and 10 verses it is well observed, that Levi paid tithes unto Melchisedec, in Abraham. Now Levi received the office of the priesthood from God, and was to take tithes from the people; yet Levi paid to Melchisedec, or to a greater and higher priest than himself; hence that high priest, who should afterward appear, of whom Melchisedec was a type, must be much superior to any of the Levitical priests, who paid tithes in Abraham to Melchisedec. Melchisedec's greatest honor was, that it was his place and privilege to bless Abraham. In the 7th verse we learn that he who gives the blessing is greater than he who receives it; therefore Christ, the antitype of this priest, the mediator of all blessings to the children of men, must be greater than all other priests. Therefore let us put all our trust in him, and it will be for our future welfare. Here I will leave this subject, and give it over to some that are more competent of handling it than I am. DANIEL M. MILLER.

Close Communion.

Upon the request of a brother, two brethren have written on the above subject in No. 37, to which we feel to add something, not so much of scriptural proof, as the first brother requested, but rather more of the practical application of the doctrine, if possible. And as we find it in actual practice around us in this part of the state of Pennsylvania, it being borne in mind that we live along the zizzag and obscure line of demarcation between New England Yankee and Pennsylvania German sentiment and civilization. Here we cannot fail to notice the powerful influence early culture and association exert upon any community of people. Here we have "loose communion" as well as "close communion" baptists. The first are Unitarian, the latter Trinitarian. The first Arminian, the latter Calvanistic. The first make "Christian character the only test of church fellowship," the latter add immersion as a test also. The first denominate themselves "Christians" as a church, the latter are known as the "Regular Baptists." The "Christians" fellowship Trinitarians, Universalists Deists, Quakers, Sprinklists, and pretty much all others who believe in God and bear a Christian character in the world as it runs. They in turn are denied fellowship in Pedo-rantist and other so-called Evangelical churches, on account of their Unitarian sentiments. The great majority of them are single immersionists, which mode they advocate freely and publicly. This "open" or "loose" communion doctrine they defend by conceding, as they say the indefeasible right of private judgment in all matters of conscience; and this, I feel willing to admit to be about the only consistent ground to occupy, for persons willing to fellowship with unbaptized persons, even though they be church members.

The Baptists hold baptism to be a necessary qulification to admission to the communion table, and they further hold that sprinkling, adult or infant, is not Christian baptism, consequently they cannot truly and honestly invite pedo-rantist people to their communion tables.

I use for the term pedo-baptist, pedo-rantist, from pedo–infant, rantizo —to sprinkle, literally, infant-sprinklist. If sprinkling is not baptism at all, then they are not even Pedo-baptists, for I wish to be consistent even at the risk of being considered uncourteous. Now I trust that the most illiterate can see clearly why Baptists are stigmatized as bigoted, uncharotable close communionists, by pedo-rantist people; that it is solely because they make their deeds or works correspond to their profession. They deny more frequently by their acts, than by their words, that sprinkling is baptism at all. "Actions speak louder than words" upon these communion occasions, and then is the time it "hurts." Now then, we have seen the Baptists boldly set up the standard that immersion only is Baptism, and, well they may, for they have, on the field of controversy, silenced every opponent worthy of notice.

And now brethren, how is it with us, do we place the standard of fitness too high? Do we make the qualifications too numerous? Do we enforce too many tests to fellowship and communion? We require trine-immersion. We require feet-washing. We require participation in the love-feast. We require the hand of fellowship, the salutation of the kiss of charity, and the maintenance of the poor; non-combativeness, non-conformity in dress to some extent, and self-denial generally, along with non-sweating and no office-seeking, or holding or taking active part in voting men into office under the civil government.

Here we may readily realize the wide extending divergence, between the self-gratifying and the self-denying religious bodies. Look at the contrast brethren, and say whether you think it is just as it should be. Many more questions and suggestions present themselves, but for fear of becoming tedious, we tarry here for this time. P. H. BEAVER.

Sabbath Reflection.

To-day being Sunday, rainy, and no meeting near, I was sorely tempted to go to a neighbor's; but after reflecting awhile, I concluded that it would probably be more edifying to write a few lines for the COMPANION. We young members are, sometimes, when in company, too light-minded, forgetful of our calling, and then frequently engage in idle conversation and gossiping, which ought not to be so. My dear young brethren and sisters, let us try to advance on our journey Zionward, with the Poet.

"Come let us anew our journey pursue"—
Roll 'round with the year,
And never stand still till the Master appear
His adorable will let us gladly fulfill,
And our talents improve,
By the patience of hope and the labor of love.

He Shall be Great.

"Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1: 30—33.

In the above text a promise is given by God, through his holy angel Gabriel, which must be fulfilled in every particular; for God said, his word, which is gone out of his mouth, shall not turn unto him void, but must accomplish, that for which it was sent. Therefore the inquiry naturally arises, How, when, and where shall the above promises be fulfilled? We answer, they must be fulfilled by him who has given them, as well as in the place and the subjects to whom they were given; and that we know was given from heaven to earth, and from God to man, or, in other words, to Abraham and his seed, Christ, which is the promised seed, the Son called Jesus.

"He shall be great." Hence we rely on these promises, knowing that God is not slack concerning them. You and I, my readers, would have to be very dull and slothful indeed, if we could not, or would not, remember and keep our promises seven or eight days; and Peter tells us, so are a thousand years with the Lord as one day, and one day as a thousand years. So the promise stands, as if made yesterday, to Abraham, saying, "In thee, and in thy seed, shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ."

Now every Bible reader, and believer, knows assuredly that this seed, (Christ the Lord,) was born according to promise; and by him everything was fulfilled that was written of him in the law, and in the prophets, up to the time of his crucifixion, burial, resurrection, and his ascension, and hence our text may well say, "he shall be great," for truly he did many great and mighty deeds, so that people had to exclaim, "We have never seen it so before, for he hath done all things well." And now the Father "also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Yes' "he shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David."

Now we look for the promises following the ascension of Christ, to be strictly fulfilled, the same preceding ones were; for Isaiah saith, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isaiah 9: 7. "He shall be great," said Grabriel to Mary yea, we look for him to be King of kings, and Lord of lords; for he shall sit upon the throne of his father David. Jesus Christ was the descendent of David, according to the flesh; and to him, and to no other was the everlasting dominion promised. The one whom the Jews denied, rejected, and crucified, shall reign over the house of Jacob forever. Jesus, the Son of David, is the one to whom the Prophet had reference when he said, "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven; and came to the Ancient of days; and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Daniel. 7: 13, 14.

The query may arise, where shall this kingdom be established? I might ask, where were the preceding? The prophet having given no intimation, nor doth our text, not even the remotest, of its transfer to another globe or world, we are unavoidably left to conclude that it will be on earth, like that of David's was. We are well aware, that we would not meet with so much opposition, if we said the saint's eternal rest is somewhere beyond the stars, or on some other globe, in a word, the more uncertain, the more incomprehensive we should describe the locality of the inheritance reserved for the saints, the more edifying even should we perhaps appear unto many. If, however, we should assert that this kingdom, of our text, identifying it with the heavenly state, was to be where all the preceding were, namely on earth, many of the readers would perhaps say like the Athenians, that they might know what this babbler said. I ask why should not the everlasting kingdom spoken of be on earth, or the place of our future heaven? True, the knowledge of the place where heaven is, is not essential to salvation, so we only have the fitness. He who purchased us for heaven will safely lead us thither. If we keep his commandments, then shall we enter in through the gates; then shall we stand before the throne of the King, and have a right to the tree of life.

But I ask, is the locality of our heaven, the saint's inheritance, a subject of revelation? If it is, it can not be good to be without knowledge in this respect, as little as in anything else that is revealed. I ask again, why should not earth be the locality of the future kingdom? I have asked in a former article, whether there is any other spot upon which God has bestowed the same honor? I answer, nay. It is the spot the holy feet of the most high, who is to be great, have trodden 33 years; not in his kingly robe or power, but as one who had not where to lay his head, as one that was despised, oppressed, and rejected, dumb as a lamb to slaughter, and as a sheep before his shearer, so he opened not his mouth, although he is the true heir by promise, as we see. Gen. 12: 7, "And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, unto thy seed will I give this land." Gen. 17: 8, "And I will give unto thee and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and will be their God."

This is a promise, given by God himself, and I believe it be immutable, steadfast and immoveble, sure as his throne. It is direct, it is unmistakably plain, both as regards the thing promised, and the person, or persons, to whom. It is evident that this promise, is yet in the future, and will yet be obtained by Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession. Now from this text many are ready to believe that the Jews once more nationally are to obtain the promise, and inhabit the land, as mortal men, or as probationers for the kingdom of Christ. The return of the Jews to Palestine is not only extensively believed, but also advocated by many learned and eloquent men. It would be almost thought unwise or imprudent for a man to assail this doctrine, by the authority of the Bible, and say it is lacking proper evidence to sustain it. I will however venture to say, I have never seen it half way proven that such will be the case before the coming of Christ and the first resurrection. Let us go to the Bible again, lest this subject might be misunderstood. It has been misapprehended, though it ought not to be, with all the light, and the advantage of the gospel.

This promise was given to Abraham and his seed, we all admit. Now let an inspired apostle explain it for us, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" Gal. 3:16. Not the Jews, then, as much, but Christ is the heir. Hear the same Apostle again, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs, according to the promise." Gal. 3: 26—29. Hence we see that the promises are to the spiritual Israel.

I will again ask the reader, where do you read of the return of the Jews, as a nation, to the land of Palestine, or to Jerusalem? I say it is not taught in the Bible. I know that the return of Israel to their own land is promised. "Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land." Ezek. 37: 21. Please read the whole of this chapter, that you may know from whence they come. The Israel that shall return are all the faithful that have ever lived, from under every dispensation, whether patriarchal, Mosaic, or Christian,—all Jews who were such inwardly, and whose circumcision was that of the heart, and in the spirit; and all true believers in Christ, of the Gentile race, or of lineage; for saith Paul, "The scripture foreseeing that God, would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed. So, then, they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham; Gal 3: 8, 9. "And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, * * * for the promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith, for if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect; therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all; as it is written, 'I have made thee a father of many nations,' before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead," &c. See Rom. 4, 12—17.

"So shall they be my people, and I will be their God; and David, my servant, shall be King over them; and they all shall have one shepherd. * * * And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob, my servant. * * * And my servant David shall be their prince forever"; Ezek. 37, 23—25.

"And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon His name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord, for he has done excellent things; this is known in all the earth. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion, for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee;" Isaiah 12, 4—6.

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover his people, which shall be left;" Isaiah 11: 11.

"In those days the House of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers;" Jer. 3; 18.

"And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first;" Jer. 33: 7.

My Mother's Grave.

"My mother's grave! Up there beneath the trees,'
I love to go alone, and sit, and look Upon that grassy mound. My cradle hours
Come back again so sweetly, when I woke
And lifted up my head to kiss the cheek
That bowed to meet me."

How many thoughts cluster around the heart, as we approach this monument of our affection! All that is noble in our nature is aroused at the thought of its desecration. We hallow the spot where the last remains of her who loves us lie slumbering. Although long years may have passed, and partially obliterated the scenes of her death and burial from our minds, yet it is enough to know that here, beneath us, lie the remains of our mother!

Mother! How affecting is the sound of that one word! It inspires us with noble aspirations and firmer determinations for the future; that we act up to that high ideal which that mother may have concerning her much-loved child. Can we prove recreant to those principles which she has endeavored to instill into our youthful minds—principles of justice, virtue, and religion? The hardened criminal, as he passes from one sin to another, at times recalls the memory of his mother, and mourns because of his wicked departure from rectitude. So the thoughts of the kindness and virtue for a moment affect his heart, and he resolves to change his course and be a man again. But resolution fails, and to drown remorse, he plunges deeper and still deeper into the whirlpool of crime. The thoughts of that departed mother, and of that mother's grave, and of that mother's instruction in his earlier years, are driven away and have no lasting effect upon his memory. But the Christian reverences the memory of his mother. The thought, "My mother's grave," brings to my mind endearing recollections of the past. He remembers, when, but a boy of eight summers, being called to the bedside of his suffering parent, to hear from her lips, kind words of instruction and admonition. He remembers, too, the midnight hour when he was called to receive her last benediction, her last farewell. The hour had come in which she must pass to that unseen world,

Where sickness, sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt, and feared no more.

He was called to witness her departure to that better life—that life of immortality. Her last token of recognition, her last intelligible whisperings of farewell, still remain as if engraven with a pen of iron upon memory's tablet. Long years have passed. The turf has grown green above the coffin. The marble slab marks her resting place. She has passed away, but the influence of her godly example is still felt. We approach the grave with pensiveness and silence; for beneath these clods lie her remains, who first instilled into our minds the principles of Christian charity and true benevolence. Why should we not tread lightly as we approach the sacred spot?

Young man! Hast thou wandered from the paths of religion and virtue? hast thou sought the house of the vicious and the despised? Turn thy steps towards the church-yard, seek out the spot that thou callest, "My mother's grave;" fall upon it; call to mind the instruction of the parent; resolve to turn from the ways of evil, and then call upon thy "Father in heaven," for pardon and assistance.

Young woman! Hast thou forgotten the gentle words of thy mother, and sought the pleasures of the world, and forsaken the ways of virtue? Turn thy thoughts towards thy mother's grave, recall the memories of days past, and may they inspire with courage, and cause new hopes of immortality to spring forth from the inward fountains of the soul, fresh and vigorous. Oh! may the thoughts of a mother's grave have a great effect upon the heart of every sins-sick soul, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Keep the Sabbath Holy.

The above is frequently, in these days, questioned upon, whether it is a direct command of Christ or of the apostles, and is sometimes said not to be, that it is only kept up as a custom of the Law. Now I will refer all such to the ten commandments delivered to Moses. "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work," Exod. 20: 8—10. "Whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death, Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day:" Exod. 35: 28. And much more is said upon it, but we wish to be brief and get to the point. This shows the command, the penalty, and the strictnees thereof. Now let us see what Christ, says concerning this law of Moses in Matthew 5: 17, 18, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you. Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in nowise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven." This is Christ's own language. Now he says in Luke 16: 19, "And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass away, than one tittle of the law to fail." Luke 18: 20. "Thou knowest the commandments &c." Hebrews 4: 1, 4, Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works. Now we think we have proven it beyond all doubt, by the best of authority, to be a command of Christ, and his Testament, in his own words confirming the law of Moses, and hope men will examine closely for themselves, and learn to keep it as the Lord's day, holy to God, as one in the contemplation of that day of rest that is in the future, that is set apart where it says, "One day in thy sight is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." "Six days shalt thou labor" is set an indispensable duty throughout the Scripture, in a two-fold sense; and we must labor six days, or the seventh cannot be a day of rest for us; for we are making every day a day of idleness, and are not tired or wearied with labor, and are not prepared to enjoy that rest in either sense. If we are pulling at the ox six days out of the week, it is likely we will have him out on the seventh; but if we are idle and putting him in and maybe helping him a little, he is sure to be in on the seventh; but if he lie there over Saturday or one night, let him lie over the Sabbath. This I think. But again it is said, "They have Moses and the prophets, if they will not hear them, they will not hear though one rose from the dead." Now he has arisen from the dead, and is crying, "He that hath ears to hear let him hear;" and I hope all of us, who profess his name and hope to be saved, are listening with all our ears, souls, minds, and strength.

Insurance Company.

In the past week my thoughts run something like this: Why is it that the Brethren have not got an insurance company, where brethren can get their property insured without going out of the church to have it done? Some may say we need no such company. But let us look at the matter in this light: A brother's house or barn is burnt, and he is not able to re-build it without help from some source or other. That man starts out with a subscription paper, soliciting help from his neighbors and friends to re-build what the element of fire destroyed. The answer he will get of the first man he may approach will be, "I don't feel able." The next, "Why did you not have your building insured like I have mine?" Instead of this he could go to the company and draw the amount his policy calls for.

In this fast age I think it would be a fruitless attempt for a man to raise funds by subscription to re-build anything that fire has destroyed, since there are so many ways of getting property secured.

I think the time has come when something should be done by way of insurance by the brotherhood, for nearly all the brethren have their property insured in companies of the world, where they often get in trouble trying to get our just dues.

I would suggest the stock company plan, and have the cash capital put out on interest, to defray the expenses of the company; and if any money be left in the company's hands, after paying the expenses of said company, the residue to go for the support of the poor members of the church. I saw a plan suggested in COMPANION No. 40, page 632, by brother D. H. Plaine, of Dansville, N. Y. It is on the mutual plan. But I think the expenses would be very great in raising a company and carrying it out by the plan brother Plaine suggests. When any loss occurs by fire, there should be a collector appointed in each district, or sub-district, to collect taxes levied by the President and directors of the company, and thus it would make heavy expenses. Now some one may say, but Paul teaches: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Now, brethren, I think we would just be doing what we are taught to do, by paying our policy of insurance; and, in case of loss, the company pay the loss, according to promise. Now, I do not see why we would not be bearing one another's burdens, only we would be doing it in a systematic way. Let us have system in all we do.

I hope to see a move made by the brotherhood in some way for insurance. D. F. WAGNER.

Thoughts on Living.

Not being permitted this pleasant Sabbath morning to meet in the sanctuary, to worship with the people of God, which is so desirable, I visited the graves of some of my dearest friends. While here I was deeply impressed with the thought of living, as it is our privilege, and the desire of God we shall. God has placed us here as free moral agents, given us free agency; yet he desires we should do right that we might be happy, both in this life and the future. He wills that all would be saved and come to the knowledge of truth and live; yet does not use compulsory means.

The thought of living is very serious, and worthy of much deep reflection, as we have but once to live, and this life is the preparatory to the future — to a time of endless duration. Suppose we were permitted to live all the days allotted unto man; they are a very short space of time, 'tis but our youth in comparison to Eternity. How important the thought of living, of being and doing all the good we can, while we have the opportunity. And oh, the joy that will crown the reflection of a well spent life, is worth all our efforts and striving for! And now, kind reader, I hope you will seriously and candidly reflect, and not only reflect, but we would desire you to feel the importance of living; of living a holy life concentrated in the service of God; a life that will prepare you to live, and will afford you real pleasure here, and joys that the world knows nothing of. It will make you a fit subject to enjoy that pure and holy society in heaven.

Dear Christian friends, we are all creatures of influence, and there is not a day, may I say not an hour, but we are leaving impressions of some kind on the mind of some; and many of us have dear friends who are yet unconverted, and there is not anything we desire as much as their conversion. But are we exerting our greatest efforts in their welfare? And as the poet says,

"Weep for the lost. Lord make us weep.
And toil with ceaseless care;
To save our friends ere yet they pass,
That point of deep despair."

Kind reader, in your retired meditation we ask you to seriously reflect on the importance of living, as it is our privilege and duty we should live a life that will answer the end for which we were created, and one that will prepare us for the enjoyment of heaven. And when we are done with time and timely things here, may we have so lived as to meet the approbation of our heavenly Parent, and enjoy those rich blessings he has in reserve for those who love him, is my desire and prayer.

The Necessity of Prayer.

The believer should say, "Lord keep up my heart in a way of honoring thee under all my troubles and afflictions. My troubles will then be no troubles, and my afflictions no afflictions. Help me to believe in thee, by becoming thy servant, and submitting to thy will."

Weak Christians are like children, they expect a great reward for very little labor. But let their wills be crossed by their children or friends, or let them suffer in their estate, and they will cry out, "No sorrow like my sorrow! No cross like my cross!" With an eye of faith fixed on encouragements, heavy afflictions are made light, and long afflictions short.

"The spiritual sluggards are in danger of many strokes." Oh, the deadly sins, temptations and judgments that the spiritual sluggard will have to undergo! He is an enemy to himself, and a warm friend to Satan. He is too lazy to pray, to read, or to assemble with the saints and hear the word of the Lord preached.

Prayer is far from being a hindrance to man's business; nay, it is the means of bringing blessings upon it. Prayer and provender never hinder a journey.

We believe, and it has been said, that man may profit more in the knowledge of the scriptures by private prayers than by a long study of them. Many Christians have found prayer to be a shelter for the soul, a sacrifice to God, a sweet savor to Christ, a scourge to Satan, and an inlet to assurance.

DANIEL LONGANECKER.

The Presence of God.

The habitual conviction of the presence of God is the sovereign remedy in temptation; it supports, it consoles, it calms us. We must not be surprised that we are tempted. We are placed here to be proven by temptations. Everything is temptation to us. Crosses irritate our pride, and prosperity flatters it; our life is a continual warfare, but Jesus Christ combats with us.

We must let temptation, like a tempest, beat upon our heads, and still move on, like a traveler surprised on the way by a storm, who wraps his cloak about him and goes on his journey in spite of the opposing elements.

In a certain sense there is little to do in doing the will of God. Still it is true that it is a great work, because it must be without any reserve. This spirit enters the secret foldings of our hearts, and even the most upright affections and the most necessary attachments must be regulated by his will; but it is not constraint and contention that advance us in our Christian course. On the contrary, it is the yielding of our wills, without restriction and without choice, to tread cheerfully every day in the path which Providence leads us to fear nothing, to be discouraged by nothing, to see our duty in the present moment, to trust all else without reserve to the will and power of God. Let us pray to our heavenly Father that our will may be swallowed up in his. — Fenelon.

Tell the Truth.

Boy, at all times tell the truth,
Let no lie defile thy youth;
If thou art wrong, be thine the shame,
Speak the truth, and bear the blame.

Truth is honest, truth is sure,
Truth is strong and must endure;
Falsehood lasts a single day,
Then it vanishes away.

Boy, at all times tell the truth,
Let no lie defile thy youth;
Truth is steadfast, sure and fast
Certain to prevail at last.

Too Late for the Boat.

"Simon, you must make haste, or you will be too late for the boat," said Mrs Shaw to her son, who was preparing to set out for the city, but not with as much quickness as seemed desirable.

"I never was too late," said Simon, as though that were a conclusive argument.

"You will certainly be too late to-day, unless the clock is too fast."

Simon looked at his watch, and proceeded with more haste to get ready. He left the house scarcely bidding his mother good-by. He was not gone long. In less than an hour he re-entered the house.

"Boat left me," was his remark; and he went to his room, perhaps to escape a reproof for having neglected the caution his mother had given him.

It was a great disappointment to Simon that he did not get on board the boat. He had looked forward to the visit he was about to make for months. There was a particular reason why he wished to reach the place by that day's boat. He had no one to blame but himself. A little more care, and he would not have been left.

Men often suffer greater disappointments than that connected by the failure to make a visit, in consequence of being too late. A young man was once taken as a clerk in a large manufacturing establishment. He was the son of a deceased friend of the proprietor. The proprietor gave him his place for his father's sake. He intended to make him in due time a partner in the concern, and thus to put him on the high road to fortune. He was a prompt man, and required promptness on the part of those in his employment.

The young man's conduct proved very satisfactory in many respects. He was thoroughly honest, truthful and faithful; but he was not always prompt. When told that a thing must be done by a certain hour, it was not always done by the time. It would never be neglected; but would not be finished till after the time. Several times the proprietor made appointments with him, and each time he was a few minutes after the time. Nothing was said to him by way of complaint, but his tardiness prevented his having a place in the firm. Mr. L. wanted a man that he could depend upon for promptness as well as fidelity. In this sense, many a man has been too late for the boat.

One of the first habits young persons should form should be that of doing things at the right time. They should establish a character that will be a pledge that whenever anything was undertaken, it would be completed at the right time. If you make an engagement to meet any one at a certain time, be sure and be at the place exactly at the time appointed. Do not say, a few minutes will not make any difference. If you engage to do a thing by a certain hour, do not say it will be just as well if it be done half an hour afterwards.

There is a certain time during which the mind is capable of rapid improvement, and when habits are easily formed. That time must be promptly used by those who desire mental improvement. Many who feel the importance of cultivating their minds, and who know that labor is necessary to their cultivation, are not ready to begin in earnest till the best season for improvement has passed. You intend to read a good book. Don't put it off. Do it without delay. Don't be too late for the boat.

There is a certain time in which the soul may be educated for eternity—in which salvation may be secured. It must be done previously to a certain time, or it must remain undone for eternity. Hence the work should be entered upon promptly, with the determination to have it done by the appointed time. But many put it off till it is too late. They intend to do it; they intend to become Christians, but delay the work of repentance till the day of grace is past. They may then put forth earnest efforts, but they will be too late. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.

Education and Employment of Girls.

Nothing so tends to the degeneracy of womanhood as a life of laziness and indulgence—an aim for a wealthy husband, and then life with no object nor aim beyond raising a family, whether taste lies in that direction or not. It is not only bad for physical health, but it is for moral also. A very serious and common mistake in the training of our girls is the neglect definitely to provide against the vicissitudes of life with the faculty of noble self-support. Just to think of your daughter, well born and bred and rocked in the lap of luxury, coming one of these days to sewing or keeping boarders for a livelihood. Yet thousands of girls, upon whose girlhood fortune lavished her gifts, have come to that. It seems to us that every rich man who has daughters should provide for them with visions of the almshouse continually floating before his eyes. No amount of pecuniary endowment will be a sure defense against the demons of pauperism. The fires may burn it up, the winds may scatter it, the waves may ingulf it, prodigal scoundrels of husbands may waste it, rascally trustees and executors may pillage it. These and a thousand kindred contingencies, considered beside the proverbial helplessness of woman, are almost enough to make a thoughtful and cautious man pray that daughters may not be born unto him. So, then, we say, let the education of our girls provide for the possible problems of self-help in the noblest possible way. The daughters of millionaires and mechanics alike should be made distinctly to understand that all the love romances lie, and that there is no such thing as making a compact with fortune to avert the necessity of honest toil. Nay, more, we would have the girls taught that labor, especially brain labor, for the benefit of the world, is too noble to be undertaken for mere mercenary ends, albeit the world must and will pay for it. Our American girls need a great deal of discipline in this respect, and there fathers and mothers need to have a great many of their foolish notions of propriety about toil, and the wicked caste idea it encourages, killed as the rank social weed it is. You will hardly find a girl who will teach school, or a parent who will allow it, except under the compulsion of a scanty purse. What a shame to our Christianity is this! A fine lady, rustling in her silks, boasts that she has had all masters in literature and art, has seen all the galleries of Europe, speaks three languages can draw from nature, and we know not what else; and yet she would not soil her respectability by teaching a child of ignorance the alphabet or hammering the multiplication table into a class of little know-nothings in calico! Sure enough, the millennium has not come yet.

S. S. Teacher.

You are the representative of Christ to your class. The common people heard him gladly, and little children loved to gather around him. There was nothing repulsive in his looks or manners. Let your class see that you are happy,—that religion makes you so. Greet them as glad to see them. Cause them to feel you love them. Remember you are the living epistle which they read more than their Bibles, and their idea of what religion is will be what they see you are. You have no business to misrepresent the blessed gospel with a sad face and unnatural Sunday dignity; rather as a Christian let your scholars see how much more joy a forgiven soul has than an unforgiven one.

Editor's Diary.

SATURDAY, Sept. 21st. Preached at the new meeting-house at Martinsburg. Brethren Leonard Furry, S. A. Moore and John B. Replogle, from the Yellow Creek congregation, were present. Had an attentive audience. Lodged at brother Jacob L. Wineland's, at Clover Creek.

SUNDAY, 22d. Accompanied brother Wineland to one of their regular appointments, down Clover Creek, near brother George Smith's. Had a small but attentive audience. Dined at old brother Bottomfield's. He has given his farm into the charge of his son Samuel, who is giving special attention to the cultivation of grapes and other fruits. We never ate such delicious grapes. He also manufactures a pure article of grape wine. His address is Williamsburg, Pa.

Preached at the Clover Creek Meeting-house, in the evening. Lodged at brother Jacob D. Brumbaugh's, married to our sister Rebecca.

MONDAY, 23rd. Visited the grave of brother John D. Brumbaugh, at the Brumbaugh burying ground, and assisted in dressing it; also cut the initials, J. D. B. upon the rough stone at the head. Oh! how many are sleeping beneath this sod whom we used to know so well. What a pleasant time it will be when we shall meet them in the world of light! In the afternoon, brother John D. Brumbaugh having kindly furnished us the use of his horse and buggy, we visted our uncle Alexander Holsinger, with whom we took supper, and had a pleasant interview. He is now our only uncle living in Pennsylvania. Thence to sister Lizzie Holsinger, widow of brother Christian L. Holsinger, where we lodged. Sister H. was left a widow with a large family, but has a pleasant home, and has her children in Christian subjection.

TUESDAY, 24th. This day had been set apart for visiting the place of our birth. Accordingly we set out in the morning, uncle, and our sister Rebecca joining our company. We put up at John L. Holsinger's, who resides on the homestead of his father, our uncle John. Thence we walked through the "bottom" to the place we used to call Grandfather's. Brother Christian Hinkle lives on the place, being married to uncle John's youngest daughter, Barbara. They afforded us every assistance to interview the place, that could have been desired. We could easily find the spot where the barn used to stand, but there was no barn there; there was one elsewhere. We were shown where the house used to stand; there was no sign of a house there; there is a good house elsewhere. There was a new cider press at an other place. The spring-house, and the dry-house, both were moved and changed. Of the old plum trees that yielded their delicious fruit thirty years ago, there is no trace left, except upon the tablet of memory. Next we visited the orchard, and eagerly we searched for "the trees that we knew." We could find the "blood pippin," the "getling," and the "vandavers," but if it had not been for uncle we would have missed the "liquor apple," and the "sheep nose," and other varities. We would love to enlarge upon some of these old trees, but being sacred only to ourself, and our relatives and acquaintances, we forbear.

We now slowly made our way to the western end of the orchard, where we find a small enclosure, the width of one pannel of post fence, and about five times as long. It is called the old graveyard. Here are said to be one row of graves. It is enclosed by a stout fence, and overgrown by stout bushes and thorns. After removing some of these, we made an entrance, and wrote the following:

I am now sitting upon the grave of our grandfather, JOHN HOLSINGER, who was buried here on the 10th of December, 1849, having departed this life on the 8th of the same month, aged, 81 years, 4 months, and 17 days. He was long a minister of the word, having been chosen about 1807, and ordained to the Eldership about 1823-24. Here by his side, too, lies our grandmother, his wife, who died October 19th, 1847, aged 71 years and 6 days. Her maiden name was Elizabeth Mack, daughter of WM. and sister AGNES MACK (maiden name Gantz), and grand daughter of A. Mack, Jr. My grand parents were married May 2nd, 1797, and enjoyed each other's society for over fifty years. Here too, lies their youngest daughter, Elizabeth, who died May 30th, 1833, aged 17 years, 2 months, and 20 days. Here by my side is sitting my little daughter, Lottie, and on the other side is my uncle Alexander, youngest child of my grandparents; thus we have represented above ground three generations by the graves of our forefathers. There are other graves here, as uncle informs us, but we mention but one more, that of aunt Annie, wife of uncle Jacob. Grandmother has a limestone slab with the marks: "E H." Aunt Elizabeth has also a flat limestone, with E. H., 1833, at the head of the grave. Grandfather's grave has no marks. A piece of rotten board was found near the spot where it is believed to be. It is not in accordance with our will that these graves are so much neglected. And it shall not much longer remain thus. We will do much more than our proportionate share of removing them to a place where they can be kept inviolate, and dressed in Christian order. This might be done herewhile it is in the hands of its present owner, but we have no assurance any longer.

We find our report of this day is becoming too prolix, so we will suddenly close with these lines committed in childhood, and which came fresh to our mind upon this occasion:

"I paused, and the moral came home to my heart,
Behold, how of earth all its glories depart!
Then, oh, let us look, let our prospects allure,
To scenes that can fade not, to realms that endure!"

Took dinner at cousin John's, and then made our way to the house of brother George Puterbaugh's, where we supped, and enjoyed a brief social feast.

In the evening again preached in the Brethren's meeting-house at Martinsburg. Nothing unusual. Lodged at brother James Camerer's.

WEDNESDAY, 25th. Took a ride over the new railroad to Leather Cracker, now called Henrietta. Henrietta station is located near the farm formerly owned by John Faulkner. Here there has been opened one of the most extensive ore banks in the state. It is indeed an immense vein of iron. About twenty-five houses have been erected, one of which is a large and splendid hotel, and another a good store building, and station house, and fourteen of them are arranged for two families each. An astonishing improvement in a few years. It is all done by the Cambria Iron Co. Preached at Brumbaugh's meeting-house in the evening, and lodged at Elder John W. Brumbaugh's.

THURSDAY, 26. Made a few farewell visits, took supper at brother George W. Brumbaugh's, and went with brother Andrew B. Burget in his buggy to the Cross Road meeting-house, where we preached in the evening, to a congregation, part of which was very indifferent. Here we bade adieu to many of the brethren and sisters who had been accompanying us around to the meetings. We may never meet them again in this world.

Lodged at brother Conrad B. Dilling's, both of whom were companions of our youth.

FRIDAY, 27th. Spent the forenoon at brother Dilling's, and going to the post-office at Martinsburg, where we received several letters from home. In the afternoon brother John Sell took us to his home. He lives on the farm formerly called the Cash Hoover farm, and is married to our uncle John's daughter, Susan. In the evening preached at the Eshleman meeting-house. It is built on the farm of brother John Eshleman, a minister in the Yellow Creek congregation. The old brother and sister were both present, and are enjoying reasonable health, but old age is telling on them rapidly.

Lodged at brother John B. Replogle's.

SATURDAY, 28th. Brother Daniel Snowberger, who had come for us, and brother Replogle, took us to the Snowberger meeting-house, near New Enterprise, where we preached, at 10 o'clock A. M. to a fair congregation, for a week day meeting in a busy season. Hope those who attended were profited.

Dined at brother Daniel Snowberger's, where we spent the afternoon very pleasantly.

Preached in the new meeting-house, at Waterside, in the evening. Lodged at brother George Repleogle's. Were pleased to make the acquaintance of this interesting family. Several of the daughters and two of the sons are members of the church, who are still at home. Brother Joseph has lately been called to the ministry. He is a promising young brother, and the church confidently expects much from his services. We have his promises that he will apply himself to the work, and we believe the Lord will bless the effort. Brother George should be very thankful that his children are giving their hearts to the Lord, while yet in their youth.

SUNDAY, 29th. Went with the young members, in their family wagon, to the Holsinger meeting-house, where we preached, at 10 o'clock. A number of persons in our congregation had heard our grandfather, and our father preach, and now ourself—and, whether our fault or not, some of them are yet unconverted.

Dined at brother Christian Hinkle's, living on grandfather's old place. Spent a few pleasant hours. According to arrangement our company stopped at Elder Jacob Miller's for supper. This was the first time for many years that we had the pleasure of stopping with our old friend and brother, and it may easily be the last time. But we shall meet again.

In the evening we preached at the Snowberger meeting-house to a large and attentive audience.

Lodged at brother Samuel A. Moore's. In this family we are pretty familiar. The sister had quite a charge upon her, a brother's motherless infant, which was very sick. Otherwise the family was in good condition. They are coming to our Dale City home ere long, on a visit.

MONDAY, 30th. Brother Jacob Koons, a minister of the Snake Spring Valley branch, and brother John Snyder from the same branch, took us to the Koons meeting-house where we preached at 10 o'clock. There was a good turn out for the time in the week, and the season. One young woman was baptized. Dined with brother Jacob Koons, who resides on the old homestead of his father, and his parents with him, who are both quite aged. In this same house we were present at a wedding twenty years ago. Here we also met brother John T. Miller, son of Elder Martin Miller. When he and his wife were applicants for baptism nearly forty years ago, an objection was raised to them because they applied in a congregation in which they did not reside. The objection was however overruled finally, and they were received on the same day, with a number of others, at a love-feast at old brother George Replogle's, Elder Michael Meyers, of Berlin, Pa. officiating.

Brother and sister Henry Harshberger having come to meet us, now took us upon their spring wagon to their home near Bloody Run, where we were introduced to their pleasant family.

Preached in their meeting-house, near Elder Snowberger's in the evening, to more people than we had expected. Returned with brother Harshberger, after meeting.

TUESDAY, Oct. 1st. This day was spent in writing letters, and these notes to date, at the house of brother H., where excellent facilities were afforded. Brother H. was called away to preach a funeral some ten miles distant. Our private correspondence thus far has been very much neglected for want of time. Preaching twice a day does not leave much time for writing, especially when one has ever so much visiting to do between times. Even now we are in arrears to several, who we hope will accept this apology. We are in good health, and are enjoying the trip very much, and I am enduring preaching beyond the expectation of all our friends. Some are denying the old report that we are consumpted, and are confident that we may yet attain a fair age, if sudden disease will not overtake us. Very well, we shall not object if the Lord so wills it. And we will obligate ourself to devote a fair proportion of the time he may grant us, to the promotion of his cause—the cause of truth and righteousness.

Tune and Hymn Book.

Our second lot of Tune and Hymn Books has been sent out, and still our orders are not nearly filled. We are daily expecting another supply, and then we will fill all orders immediately. But let agents remember that we must wait on the binders, and that we cannot send out books before we have them, and we wish you also to rest assured that you shall have your books just as soon as we can get them to you.

So far as we have yet heard from those who have received the Tune and Hymn Book, they seem to be well pleased. If the book is not just what some might wish it to be, we think, at least, it is fully as good as should be expected, and we trust it will be, if not universally, at least generally introduced and used by the brotherhood. It contains about all the tunes in general use and quite a number that are growing into popular favor. We ought to be able to send out not less than two thousand books before the close of this year.

Remember that those who order first will be served first. We have adhered strictly to this principle, and expect to continue to do so.

TERMS: Single copies $1.25, per dozen $12.00, postage prepaid; or $10.00 per dozen by express. Money should be sent when the books are ordered.

Trine-Immersion Traced to the Apostles.

This is the title of a work of 36 pages, bound in pamphlet form, by brother J. H. Moore. It contains a collection of historical quotations from modern and ancient authors, proving that a three-fold immersion was the only method of baptizing ever practiced by the apostles and their immediate successors. In addition brother Moore puts some keen comments. We think his effort will be the means of accomplishing some good. The candid reader cannot fail in being benefited by a perusal of the book.

For terms, see his advertisement.

Folio or Octavo.

Brother Holsinger: I am decidedly against the proposed change of the COMPANION. I prefer the present style for several reasons. One reason is, I like to have every volume bound. There are some subscribers who will quit taking it if it be changed. Yours,

E. K. BURCHILY.

About a change of the present form of the C. F. C. to the form of a common newspaper—I would say, no change. One reason, it makes it look so much like a regular worldly paper, or, as some call it, a "lying sheet." Second, I have so far sewed all the numbers together, and cut the leaves, and think I may say, read them all through. I preserved every number that came into my hands for the purpose of having them bound in a book, and if the change is made I am deprived of doing so; and not only I, there might be hundreds more deprived of the same privilege. I will now answer for the subscribers of our arm of the church, leave well enough alone, and no change till a general call of your subscribers, and a satisfactory reason from them."

THOMAS GRAY

As to the COMPANION, I would prefer its continuing in its present form, as it is more in book form, and when sewed together, easier and handier to handle or read. The trouble of stitching together and cutting the leaves apart is a small matter. In its present form it is easier preserved, and more likely to be taken care of.

Answers to Correspondents.

GEORGE ASHENBRENER: We beg pardon for the mistake. It was your address we changed instead of Wm. Ashenbrener's.

J. J. FAUSNACHT: The money was received, and the paper is being sent. All right.

JOHN STUDEBAKER: It was a mistake by the binder; there may not be another such in the entire edition.

THOMAS GRAY: Your paper according to our book, was paid for to No. 37; and your name is entered for another year.

A. MOHLER: Your paper was paid for to end of Vol. 8. You have now credit on our book for Vol. 9.

The Lost Child and True Dream.

An alarming circumstance took place August 31st., in Franklin township, Washington county, Iowa, about four miles northwest of the city of Washington. W. Scranton and wife went to J. Stewart's on a visit. The children got to playing north of the barn, near the brush. About one o'clock P. M. the children all came to the house, except one little boy three years old, who refused to go. They were sent to bring him in, but could not find the little fellow. The alarm was raised, search was made that day, and all night; about midnight two men passed my house and made the alarm. The child not being found on Monday, two of my sons went in search. Hundreds of horsemen and footmen searched through timber, brush, weeds, corn-fields and grass. In the evening they reported the child not found. On Tuesday morning I started in search. The estimated number of men in search was from 1200 to 1500. In the forenoon we searched in about twelve squads. All came to the house of J. Stewart, where refreshments were furnished for men and horses. We then formed a column of men, stationed from eight to ten feet apart. A captain for every ten men, to keep them in line, marched them over farms and through brush. About two P. M. there was a heavy rain, but it did not stop the men in their search. In the evening reported the child not found. Arrangements were made for the next day. That night we had heavy rain and winds. This was Tuesday night. That night Mrs. Clark, wife of William Clark, living one mile South of the house of J. Stewart; had a dream, as follows: She was out in search of the child, half a mile south-east of J. Stewart's house, in a long slough, and came to a dark place; after awhile she came to a place that was light, near a pile of rails. Here was something green. She looked under it, and saw the child sitting, or rather in a leaning posture. It looked into her face very pleasantly, but she could not get it. She awoke, and afterwards fell asleep, and the vision came the second and third times, identically as the first. She told her husband her dream, and said, "I want you to go and get the child." But he refused; saying, "That place has been searched and it is not there, and I have no faith in dreams." Mrs. Clark's health is so delicate, that it was physically impossible for her to go; but she resolved, saying, "If you wont go, I will." He started, and when he came within some distance of the place, he heard a singular noise. Being much excited he left his horse, and ran for the place where the noise was, but ran some distance past. He paused, listened, and once more heard the noise. He then went into the slough. The grass was tall, thick, and rough. He got down on his knees, parted the grass, and found the child under a twirl of grass, lying partly in the water, yet alive and sensible, but in a miserable condition, covered with mud and maggots.

The child is now as well as ever. It was lost about sixty-six hours, and had nothing to eat but half a biscuit. I suppose there was never a time of rejoicing in Washington county like this: cheering, hat waving, and one man even wept for joy. Every bell in Washington rung. I was also much surprised to see the sympathy manifested for the child. There were men on the ground from twelve to fifteen miles distance. Hundreds were out from Washington City, among them, doctors, lawyers, and merchants. They waded through brush, weeds, and corn-fields, regardless of consequences. Mr. W. Scranton had offered $500 reward to any one who should find the child, but Mr. Clark would not accept of any, he said, "I found the prize when I found the child." It is supposed that the child was there about all the time, as there were five or six beds where it had lain. When found it was unable to walk. The day previous, Robertson, in search, rode within three feet of the child. We think it could not have been found without a revelation, as it was so completely covered, that in any ordinary search, we would have trodden upon it and not have found it.

FOREST CITY, Holt Co., Mo.)

Dear Companion:—We have had our communion meeting, and we are all built up in our most holy faith. Yes, we had a good meeting. We had brother George Hoover, from Indiana; brother Jonathan Lichty, from Kansas; brethren John and Christian Forney, from Nebraska; brethren Daniel Glick, and Benjamin Bashore, from Andrew county, Mo. The brethren held forth the gospel in its purity to a large and attentive congregation. The best behavior throughout the meeting I ever saw. The people kept their seats during feet-washing, eating the supper, and taking the communion. There was no talking among the people; or, at least, I heard none. Our meeting passed off in a sublime manner; no disturbance in any way. It seemed that all had come to see and hear the true order of the House of God; and the brethren that spake, I think, made good and lasting impressions upon us all. We hope the Lord has blessed their labors for good. There were two precious souls received by baptism on Saturday evening. May God give them grace to hold out faithful unto the end.

On Sunday, after the forenoon meeting was dismissed, we received a message to come, on Monday morning by ten o'clock, to attend the funeral of a young man in Whig Valley, upper end of Holt county, Mo., about fifteen miles distant. This young man, like many others, put off the one thing needful too long. He had made several resolves to choose that good part that cannot be taken from us, but still put it off from time to time, until he was stricken with lung fever, and in a few days death entered and took him to his long home from whence no traveler returns. Yes, Henry now sleeps the sleep of death, beneath the clods of Whig Valley, until the resurrection of the body of the dead. Peace to his remains. Let his brothers and sisters take warning. You, too, must die, as well as Henry; therefore prepare to meet God in peace. We must all die, and are as water spilt upon the ground, that cannot be gathered up again. Oh, young people, as the Lord liveth, and as your souls liveth, there is but a step between you and death! Repent, your end is nigh. Come to Jesus before it is eternally too late. I hope you all may take warning by this sad dispensation of God's divine providence.

Notes of Travel.

BY J. S. FLORY.

On the morning of the 23rd of August took the train at Falls of Kanawha for Charleston, where I arrived after a few hours ride. Met with brother Starkey, who took me to Two-mile school-house, preaching at 11 o'clock A. M. and 4 P. M. Preaching at Methodist church, some two miles up. Sunday 25th, at 11 o'clock, preached the funeral of sister M. A. Edens to a large concourse of people at Piny Point school-house. Sister Edens came from Franklin county, Va., a few years ago, to Kanawha, West Virginia. Her name formerly was Smith. She died June 12th, 1872, aged 40 years. Left an infant 8 months old. She died rejoicing in the strong hope of a glorious inheritance in heaven. Her last words were, "Sing, 'Children of the Heavenly King.'"

At night preached in a school-house in another neighborhood, to a good congregation of attentive people. Went home with brother Starkey to Charleston. Meeting in the city next day at 11 o'clock P. M. After meeting brother Perry took me to his home, nine miles down the river. Preaching at night in the school-house near by. Went home the next day with brother Starkey. Spent some hours with sister M. Haws and friends in Charleston. In the evening took the train and returned to the Kanawha Falls. Set out on foot after night with company, and crossed the Cotton Mountain. Arrived at brother David Harshbarger's at 12 o'clock at night. Home next day; found all well.

September 7th, in company with brother Joseph Hutchison set out for Sumvers county. Meeting at 11 o'clock A. M. at brother J. Martin's. At night at Lick Creek meeting-house. Next day at the same place. Methodists were carrying on a quarterly meeting, and inasmuch as I had given way upon former occasions to them, many of the people urged we should ask for a division of time upon the occasion as he had an appointment elsewhere in the afternoon. I, as courteously as I could, made the request. But, nay! The presiding elder, in whom self-esteem seemed to have the ascendency over "Do as you wish to be done by," in an abrupt manner, proposed to leave the house, unless the trustees would grant him full privileges. But one trustee was present. He refused to decide the matter in that way. Seeing the confusion about to arise I yielded all rightful claims I had to the hour to the unyielding party. But, no, the Rev. Elder would not condescend to accept of it from us; so he "Bolted," giving evidence that anger had the place charity should occupy. A member (to his eyes no doubt distressingly small) went with him. The house which was quite commodious, was left to us full of people, with some about the door and windows. So we had nothing more to do than to attend to the services, trusting in the Lord. Much interest was manifested. I much regretted the occurrence that took place there, but I was assured on every hand that I was not to blame. At 4 P. M., had meeting at Hutchison's, school-house, from which neighborhood next day brother Hutchison returned home. I went to Greenbrier county, and returned home Tuesday night.

Following Friday, the 13th, in company with wife and others, set out for Meadow Bluff Greenbrier county. At 3 o'clock P. M. attended meeting at brother C. Masters'. Next morning "as it began to dawn toward the heat of day," in company with brother A. Evans, we set out on our route. At 12 o'clock we had distanced near 30 miles, and at 2 we were at the Blue Sulpher Springs. Preached to a large congregation, baptized two persons and willing ones, and returned to brother John Forren's. Wife, and the rest of the company we had left back, arrived about 3 o'clock; also brother C. Masters with them. Public preaching announced at 4 P. M. At night had a communion season with the dear members of the section. We felt it was good to be there. Had indeed a good meeting, but we were much disappointed in not meeting "strange" ministering brethren, as we expected. Next day had two meetings at school-house near by. Good turn out of people. All night with friend D. Huff. Early next morning set out "homeward bound." At 2 P. M. arrived at sister Master's, Fayette county. At 4 P. M. public service commenced. At night had a love-feast, or communion season. In spirit we enjoyed the sweet communion we there had with fellow citizens of the saints of that household of God. But in body we were in a suffering condition, having contracted a severe cold, and having to labor so much, owing to which we had to recall our next day's appointment at same place. This we done much to our regret, as well as to that of many others. Returned home next morning, Tuesday. Thursday following our communion meeting commenced at our meeting-house. Met with brother Wm. Baily, of Raleigh, who was just recovering from severe injuries received by a fall, owing to which he could not labor in the word as freely as he otherwise could. Had a good meeting, but, owing to considerable sickness in the neighborhood, the congregation of spectators was not so large as usual. Meeting next day and choice for deacon. The lot fell on brother Alexander Evans. Next day, Saturday, we went, in company with other brethren, to Raleigh county, to attend their communion. Public service commenced at 2 P. M. Had an excellent meeting, and as good order as we ever saw on such an occasion. A large congregation were out. Next day, after the meeting closed, we returned to Fayette county. Next day preached the funeral, at the meeting-house, of a little son of brother Isaac and Dehlia Roach, who, had he lived until that day, the 23rd of September, would have been five years old. Yesterday, 29th, preached the funeral of sister Harriet Davis, (lately Smith) aged 49 years. After meeting returned home last night, much fatigued and worn by continued labors in the Master's cause. In the four communion meetings above mentioned the burden of ministering in word and the sacrament fell to the lot of your unworthy writer. The past summer's campaign has been to me one of unusual activity in the field of the Lord, and now we feel like a few weeks' of recreation and rest to our tired energies will be in place. To-day we start on a traveling tour, and next you may hear from me from the plains of the "Far West." Until then, farewell, hoping the grace of God, who deserves all praise for His goodness, will be with us and you all now and forever. J. S. FLORY.

Orchard View, West Va.

Dear Companion:—According to our expectations, our dear brother, Grabill Myers, arrived at the Lower Cumberland Church, Pa., on the evening of the 21st of September. He was met and conveyed, by brother David Niesley, to Baker's meeting-house, near Churchtown. Set in, in company with brother John Brindle, from Upper Cumberland, to preach to a large and respectable congregation, both as regards number and conduct. Opening remarks and hymn by brother Brindle. Brother Myers selected for his text 1 John 3: 1—4, reminding us of "What manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us." On Sabbath morning, the 22d, met at the same place; text, 1 John 2. Again a large and attentive congregation. Here we had the happiness to see two candidates for admission, and for heaven, stand before us, while brother Moses Miller read, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him," &c. Evening, meeting at Landis' school-house, about two miles distant; text, Rom. 10: 1—4. Monday evening, 23d, at Baker's. Tuesday evening, 24th, same place. Wednesday evening, at Shepherdstown; rainy; small meeting. Thursday, 26th, same place; text, 1 Timothy, 1. Evening, at Mohler's meeting-house; Rom. 8: 24—29. Friday evening, 27th, at Mechanicsburg. Saturday evening, 28th, same place; John 18: 36. Sunday morning, 29th, at Line's school-house, two miles distant; John 5: 24—29. Evening at Mechanicsburg; John 7: 38. Monday evening, 30th, same place; Heb. 6: 1—2. It was good for us to be there. Thank God for the visit of love. The truth has been powerfully proclaimed. We feel ourselves confirmed in the love of Jesus, and the votaries of error must certainly feel its sandy foundation. We hope his labors will be still further blessed. May the Lord bless our brother for his labors. ADAM BEELMAN.

She was a worthy sister, and a loving mother, not only in her own family but in the church and neigborhood. She was long a faithful attendant upon the sick, and as such she will be much missed in the circle in which she moved. Her funeral was attended by many sympathizing friends and neighbors. HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Remember Lot's Wife. Luke 17: 32.

You careless professors, who rest on your knees,
Amidst your vain pleasures, your profit and ease,
Now God says, "Arise, and escape for your life;
And look not behind you—'Remember Lot's wife.'

"Awake from your slumbers, the warning receive;
'Tis Jesus that warns you, the message believe.
While dangers are pending, 'Escape for your life;
And look not behind you'—'Remember Lot's Wife.'

"The first bold apostle will tempt you to stay,
And tell you no changes are found in the way:
He means to deceive you, 'Escape for your life,
And look not behind you'—'Remember Lot's Wife.'

"How many poor souls has the serpent beguiled,
With specious temptations! how many defiled?
Then be not deluded: 'Escape for your life,
And look not behind you'—'Remember Lot's wife.'

"The ways of religion true pleasures afford,
No pleasures can equal the joys of the Lord;
Forsake then the world, and escape for your life,
And look not behind you'—'Remember Lot's wife.'

"But if you determine the call to refuse,
And venture the way of destruction to choose,
Fore'er you must part with the blessings of life,
And then, if not now, you'll 'Remember Lot's wife.'"

For the COMPANION.

The Immortality of the Soul, Comforts and Happiness of the Blessed, and Groans of the Damned.

BY E. K. BUECHLEY.

"There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen &c.," Luke 16: 19—31.

The narrative of the rich man and Lazarus, as related by our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, should forever put to shame and silence those who assert that man has no immortal principle within him. There is a certain class of deluded people in the world, professing to believe the word of God, saying that the Scriptures are of Divine origin, but openly and boldly, in the face of truth, deny that man is endowed with an immortal soul; asserting that, when the body dies, all is dead; that there is no consciousness between the death of the body and the resurrection of dead; that soul and body lie dormant in the grave until the final resurrection, when those that have lived a holy life, and none else, shall be raised from the dead, and that all others, infants not excepted, should forever remain in death. They also deny the Divinity of Christ. The say, that Jesus was the Son of Man, but not the Son of God. These deluded people go by various names; such as, "Soul-sleepers," "No soulites," "Brethren of the one faith," "Christadelphians," &c.

It is not the intention of the writer of this essay, to enter into a defence of the resurrection of the dead. I deem it unnecessary to do so, as the doctrine of the resurrection, "both of the just and unjust," is so definitely taught in the Scriptures of Divine truth, that no one, who has any regard for the truth of the Bible, can possibly deny it. Neither is it his design to convince those who are wilfully ignorant, and prejudiced against the truth; but, more especially to admonish those who are willing to learn the truth, and, having learned it, to believe and obey it. I shall try to convince, by the truth, those that are not prejudiced, that there is verily a consciousness existing beyond the grave. The honest-hearted seeker after the truth, will readily admit this fact, when proven by a "thus saith the Lord." And, in passing along, I shall also attempt to persuade the gentle reader, not to place too much confidence in wealth or worldly honor, as these are all transitory and may soon take the wings of the morning and fly away; and will cite him to the words of the Savior, where he saith, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Rather let us become rich in faith, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

"There was a certain rich man" Those deluded people, alluded to above, will tell you, that the text was a parable, and, consequently, has nothing to do with our salvation. But the Savior tells us in positive language "There was a certain rich man," and also of a certain beggar. He gives a brief history of their lives and deaths, and then a more detailed history of their hereafter. The one, after death, was conveyed to place of comfort and bliss; the other, to a place of misery, torment and woe.

But suppose it had been spoken as a parable, would this help their cause? None in the least. If a parable, the Savior certainly meant to convey certain truths to our minds; namely, what the state of the dead will be beyond the grave, both of the saint and of the sinner.

"There was a certain rich man" I shall not attempt to say that this man's sins consisted altogether in his riches, or that every rich man is destined to go to hell, neither would I say, that every beggar necessarily goes to heaven. This is not the object in view. The man was rich. He probably never thought of the fact, that all good proceedeth from God. "Every good gift * * * is from above, and cometh down from the Father of light;" consequently, God is the giver of all good. These things are only lent to us; they are placed in our possession, in order that we should do good therewith unto our needy fellow-men. Therefore, if God prospers us with the good things of the earth, let us not be covetous. We ought always to be liberal in giving unto the needy and suffering. The man was rich; he accumulated all he could, and kept all unto himself, not considering the source from which it came. He shut up his bowels of compassion against the poor and suffering, by whom he was surrounded. He was, we presume, a heard-hearted, close-fisted, covetous wretch; and besides this, he was proud, haughty, and arrogant. He spent great sums in decorating his vile and sinful body; he indulged in all the sinful fashions of the world; his dishes and cups were overflowing with all the dainties and superfluities that could be obtained for money, his lusts were unrestrained. In all this he was indulging daily. "He fared sumptuously every day." He was serving his belly, his lusts, his sinful inclination. He would look down upon those who were not so favorably situated, as well as upon those who were not so gluttonous, with derision and disdain. He had all at command that a sinful heart could wish for. "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl, for your miseries that shall come upon you." —JAMES.

"And then was a certain beggar, named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores." The Savior tells us. "The poor ye have always." This is a very truth; we are always surrounded by those who are needy—with such as demand our sympathies—and to do them good is the duty of every one whom God has blessed with the good things of the earth. To withold from the needy those things wherewith God has blessed us so abundantly, would be sinful in the extreme. The poor saint, poor and decrepit, "was laid at the rich man's gate." We presume, outside of the gate, along the highway-side; for inside of the beautiful lawn, or park, would have been too humiliating, degrading, and annoying for the great nobleman.

"Desiring to be fed, with the crumbs, which fell from the rich man's table." Crumbs were asked for. The poor saint was hungry. He would say, "Give me a few crumbs only, I pray thee, such as would otherwise go to waste. I shall not ask you, sir, for a seat at your daintily furnished table; only the crumbs under your table, give me but those and I shall be satisfied; anything that will satisfy the cravings of my hunger will do me." The poor saint asked for crumbs. We are, however, not told that he received any. We presume not a morsel was given him. The proud and great of the world not only close their gates against the poor, but their hearts also. To give the crumbs to the poor, would be depriving their dogs of their meals. The rich man would say, "I respect my dogs more than I do these beggars. I cannot give him any crumbs; let him go without them; he has gone many a day with an empty belly, let him do so again; bar the gate, shut him out, let him be gone, let him starve for aught I care."

"Moreover the dogs came and licked his sores." The dumb brutes, even the dogs, had seemingly more sympathy with the poor saint, than this rich, wicked, sinful wretch: they ministered such relief unto the poor saint as they could; they befriended him, relieved him as best they could.

"And it came to pass that the beggar died." It came to be so, in the course of event: it so happened that he died, death came to his relief, the poor saint was liberated from all his privations and sufferings, as well as from the scoffings, curses, and taunts of the wicked, of all that an ungodly world could inflict upon him, of all misery woe. "Where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary be at rest." We have no account of the burial of Lazarus; yet we presume he was buried, in an humble way, as the poor are buried, without much ceremony. There was no great display made, only so he was put out of the way, away from the rich man's gate: the rich man was no more annoyed by the poor man asking him for crumbs, by his importunities.

"And was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." Heavenly messengers were in waiting to convey this saint away off, not to the rich man's gate, oh no! but out of reach of all wicked men and devils, into Abraham's bosom, into the realms of glory, into the presence of old father Abraham, who is termed "the father of the faithful." Bright, shining ones, angels, conveyed him into the place where all the sanctified go when they leave this sin-deranged world, where no more pain, nor sorrow, nor sickness, nor death shall ever disturb them. Here the poor saint could now enjoy himself with all those who have made their robes white and clean in the blood of the Lamb, where neither hunger, nor thirst, shall ever be felt any more; no more shedding of tears, no more begging for crumbs, where there will be joy and peace for ever and ever, at the right hand of God. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun. Then shall the righteous go into life eternal."—JESUS.

"We speak of the realms of the blest,
That country so bright and so fair;
And oft are its glories confessed;
But what must it be there?

"The rich man also died." The great and rich must die. They can not escape death, notwithstanding all their greatness, riches, and pomp. When death comes, there is no escape or dodging; death is a true messenger, he accomplishes that which he is sent for; no matter whether rich or poor, noble or ignoble, all must die. If wealth could evade death, comparatively few rich men would die. Death is no respecter of persons: all must pay the debt of nature. "Dust thou art, unto dust shalt thou return." Hence the lines of the poet;

"Princes, this clay must be your bed,
In spite of all your towers,
The tall, the wise, the reverend head,
Must lie as low as ours."

"And was buried." We have it in positive language, that the rich man was buried. We suppose that he was buried most magnificiently, with all the honors, pomp, style, and ostentation that wealth could lavish upon him. Thousands upon thousands were spent in order to make a great display at the funeral of this wicked, sinful wretch. No pains nor money were spared; his friends not dreaming, or thinking, that their brother for whom they were making all this great ado was already howling and screaming in hell. "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." Oh, how are the mighty fallen! But a very short time ago this man closed his eyes in death, now he opens them in hell; had but recently lived in all the splendor and riches and fashions of the world, and now finds himself in hell and torment! This man had been a "soul-sleeper" in his lifetime—the only one, too, that we read of in the Bible—but alas! he is now aroused from his stupor and sleep; he is now becoming wide awake; he now opens his eyes; he is now brought to consciousness; his feelings have become very sensitive; he is sensible of being in hell and torment! There can be no soul-sleeping in hell. Verily not! He would say, "My soul-sleeping was all in the world whilst, I was revelling in sin, and wickedness, and debauchery. Such is the inference we gather from the rich man's language uttered from hell; at least, we do not find him asleep. He is wide awake, "And see-eth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." Away off—at a great distance—out of reach of the damned—in glory, he seeth Abraham, good old Abraham, surrounded with an innumerable host of holy angels—with bright, shining ones—and Lazarus, the one whom he so recently despised, upon whom he lookod with contempt, is now in that blessed company. He who had been laid at his gate, ragged, hungry, and full of sores; the one to whom he refused the crumbs under his table. "What! he now in glory, and I in hell and in torments—in the most excruciating torments that hell can inflict—surrounded with howling demons—with all the damned in hell! My purple and fine linen, dainty dishes and cups, have all vanished like the hoar frost, and instead thereof I have misery torment and woe." "And he cried and said, Father Abraham have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame."

This once rich man is now brought very low; he now begins to pray, and cry for mercy. "Oh, have mercy on me! I pray thee, send Lazarus, send him now! I shall now freely accept of his company, although I despised him whilst we were in the world; but now send him, I pray thee, send him with a little water, with one drop only, with so much as will cleave to the tip of his finger, to cool my tongue, my parched tongue! that tongue wherewith I blasphemed God, and cursed man! that unruly little member! Oh, that I never had a tongue in my mouth!" What a prayer do we hear, from one in hell, but alas, too late! All his prayers can avail him nothing. The day of grace is spent. "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." "But Abraham said, Son remember, that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; and now therefore he is comforted, and thou art tormented." "Son, remember." Oh, what a rebuke! How horrible must it be for the damned to remember that they had all their good in their revelries and sin, in their wickedness and debaucheries. Nothing but misery and woe can be had in hell, of that however thou shalt have thy fill. Remember that mercy was offered thee in the day of grace, but thou hast turned a deaf ear to all the offers of mercy. Remember there is no more mercy to be had, after you are in hell. All this, and a thousand times more will be brought to the remembrance of the damned. Hell itself would be a kind of paradise, were it not for the remembrance of these things. There you will have ample time to refresh your memory of the slightings of mercies, you will then and there remember where the ministers of the gospel entreated you to forsake your sins, and you turned a deaf ear to all their entreaties. There you will remember that you were sometimes almost persuaded to forsake your sins. Remembering all this will but augment your miseries, sink you the deeper into eternal despair. "Besides all this, between us and you, there is a great gulf fixed." "Between us and you, between the blessed and the damned, between those in glory and those in hell, there is a great gulf; God's eternal decree is fixed between us, an impassable gulf, a fixed gulf, not an immaginary gulf, but an immovable one, a fixed one, as firm as the eternal decree of God can make it; and no one can pass over it, neither this nor that way, consequently it must remain so. "Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldst send him to my father's house, for I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Although I am lost and undone, my destiny is fixed, yet I pray thee, send him to my brethren, that he may testify in the strongest terms unto them; they are surrounded by the same temptations that I was; they are as wicked as I have been, O send him, send him quick lest they also come into this miserable place of torment! Send him to testify unto them that I am in hell, and unless they repent of their sins they will certainly also come to this place of torment, where there is no ease to be had, no not for one moment, not even a drop of water can be obtained here, and there coming here, would still augment my misery and woe." "Abraham saith unto him, they have Moses and the Prophets, let them hoar them. They have the Scriptures, let them obey the Scriptures, and they can evade this place of torment. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." "Nay, Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent." "Nay, I had the Scriptures as well as they have; but little did I care for the Scriptures, whilst I was revelling in sin, as they now are. I pray thee, send one from the dead, nothing short of this, will arouse them from their sinful career, they are so wedded to their idols; send one I pray thee, and perchance they may repent!" "If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." If one even would rise from the dead, yet would not those repent, that are wilfully sinning against light and knowledge. We see this verified in the wicked Priests, Scribes and Pharisees. When our adorable Redeemer had risen from the dead, they bribed the soldiers, and paid them large sums of money, for reporting that the disciples, had stolen him away whilst they were sleeping. "Ephriam is joined to his idols, let him alone;" Hos 4: 17

Dear reader, before I close this already too lengthy essay I would entreat you in Christ's stead, to make sure work for heaven and happiness. Do not say that there is too much hell about this essay, that it is not as dangerous as you would have us believe. I again beseech you not to trifle away your day of grace. I have not overdrawn this picture, it will be a thousand times worse, with those that have to take up their abode with the rich man in hell, than I, a feeble worm, can picture it. For God's sake open your eyes now, while mercy and pardon can be obtained, whilst Christ bids you come. You have no assurance of your lives, today you are bid to come, to-morrow may be too late, eternally too late! Repent of your sins and be saved upon the easy terms of the gospel, is the prayer of your unworthy friend, and fellow-traveller to eternity.

Home Reading.

One of the most pleasant and noble duties of the head of the family is to furnish its members with good reading. In the times which are passed it was considered enough to clothe and feed and shelter a family. This was the sum of parental duty; but lately it has been found out that wives and children have minds, and so it has become a necessity to educate the children and furnish reading for the whole household; it has been found out that the mind wants its food as well as the body, and that it wants to be sheltered from the pitiless storms of error and vice by guarding and friendly roof of intelligence and virtue.

An ignorant family in our days is an antiquated institution. It smells of the musty past; it is a dark spot which the light of the modern sun of intelligence has not reached.

Let good reading go into a home and the very atmosphere of that home gradually changes. It becomes clearer, purer, more cheerful, healthful and happy; the boys begin to grow ambitious; to talk about men, places, principles, books, the past and the future; the girls begin to feel a new life opening to them in knowledge, duty and pleasure; and so the family changes, and out from its number will go intelligent men and women to fill honorable places and be useful members of the community. Let the torch of intelligence be lit in every household; let the old and young view each other in introducing new and useful topics of investigation, and in cherishing a love of reading, study and improvement.

For the COMPANION.

He Shall be Great.

"Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1: 30—33.

These are esteemed strong passages by the advocates of the Jewish literal and national restoration, and are quoted by such with confidence, if not with an air of triumph, as unanswerably proving this very thing. But what do they mean? What is the import of these passages? That they set forth an interesting and important truth is manifested, or they would not be found in the Bible. But I will demonstrate that neither these nor similar texts teach the doctrine which they are adduced to prove; viz., the Jews returned to Palestine.

The passages of Scripture above quoted and referred to do not necessarily teach the literal and national return of the Jews to Palestine. The Moabites were judged for their pride, for their security, for their carnal confidence, and for their contempt of God and his people. "Yet," said Jehovah, "I will bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days;" Jer. 48: 47. So also of Ammon, "And afterwards I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the Lord." Jer. 49: 6. But where are Moab and Ammon? Their restoration from captivity is certainly, specifically and unmistakably promised; yet it must have another than a literal import, whatever that may be, for they cannot be restored in the ordinary sense, as they are not; and if restoration, in their case, does not mean a literal, national one, neither is it necessarily to be so understood in reference to the Jews. But some will perhaps say, that, if God has promised a national and literal return from captivity to Moab and Ammon, he will know where and how to find them, though man may not. But hear the oath of Israel's God, uttered more than two thousand years ago. "Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation;" Zeph. 2: 9. Again God declared by the prophet, speaking of the Jews, "When I shall bring again their captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, * * * * then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them. * * * * When thy sister Sodom and her daughters * * * * shall return to their former estate." then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate;" Ezek. 16: 53—55. "But Sodom is an utter and eternal desolation: fire from heaven consumed it; the waters of the Dead Sea for thousands of years have covered it. Sodom, manifestly, is to have no literal restoration, hence Jerusalem shall be contempory with it. We must then look for another meaning than that ordinarily put upon these and all similar Scriptures, commonly adduced in support of the idea of the literal Jewish restoration to Palestine.

But perhaps, some, whose minds are preoccupied, warped and prejudiced by this Jewish figment of the Jew's return to their own land, as they choose to call it, demur and dissent from this view of the case; and assert that the Jews have a good and valid title to Palestine by promise. Where is it? Where will you find it? If it be found anywhere in the Bible, it must be in Genesis, chapter 12: 8, "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." The promise then, we say again, was made to Abraham and his seed, (Christ). But Abraham never owned a foot of the land, save the cave of Machpelah;" Gen. 23. Jesus also was poor as shown above. They must yet inherit not elsewhere, but here, to verify the promise, Abraham in the resurrection, Jesus at the sounding of the trumpet of the seventh angel, Rev. 15. At the last trumpet, shall be the glorious resurrection of the sainted dead, and the sudden change of the then living Christians. And not before that time shall the great voices be heard in heaven, "Saying, the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." "And he shall be great," as our text saith, "Now is given unto him the throne of his father David. God the Father now giveth him the kingdom, of which Christ said to the Jews;" Matth. 8: 11, "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and the west, and sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into other darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth;" Matthew 21: 43. "Therefore say I unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof;" Luke 13: 28. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out," &c. These are positive texts, in plain and direct language, given by Christ himself, and can not be denied. This, my reader, does not so very favorably adduce a general or a national restitution of the Jews at the coming of Christ and his kingdom, for he himself declared, "He shall send his angels, and shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire, and there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." And again he says, "These, mine enemies, which will not have me to rule over them, bring them hither, and slay them before me." These texts are directly to the descendants of Jacob, over whose house our text says, "He shall rule forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end;" hence we look for none other in that kingdom but for such as lived and died in the faith of the Son of God, and who believed in the power of his resurrection, and in hope of immortality, which faith and hope we learn were in Abraham, as well as in all the noted faithful of the Bible. Hear the language of Job: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand, at the latter day, upon the earth; and though, after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold," &c.; Job 19: 25—27.

Then it is that the believer's faith is lost in sight, his hope in triumph, and his life in glory, for saith Paul, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory;" Col. 3: 4. And John says, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is;" 1 John 3: 2. But, on the other hand, there will be flaming fire and "Vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ;" 2 Thess 1: 8, &c; who shall suffer "Everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." This may be the same fire to which Peter had reference in his second epistle, when he saith, "The earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." During this wonderful conflagration may also the time be of the prophecy of Mal. 4, "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud—yea, and all that do wickedly—shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch; but unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall; and ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of Hosts." For it is very evident that the second resurrection has not taken place. The apostle tells us this day of vengeance and consummation will take place at the Lord's coming.

This destruction may prepare the way for the new creation, or, in other words, bring forth the new earth, in which dwelleth righteousness. In that fire the sea may be dried up; and it would also restore the land of Sodom, and of Gomorrah, as a sister to the land of Canaan, as well as in the first resurrection, all of the Sodomites and Gomorrahites, of Moab, and of Ammon, will be restored—so many of them as may be found worthy through the blood of the Lamb, shall be brought from captivity of the enemy and death, as well as the daughters of Jerusalem, and also at the same time according to the promise of Jehovah, for he is not slack concerning his promises."

So we believe will he also deal with those of the second resurrection, at the final judgment, without respect of persons, and if any advantage at all is to be had, it will be in favor of some of those other nations in preference to the Jews. This we have from Christ's own language. Hear him: "It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon, in the Judgment than for this generation;" also for, Sodom and Gomorrah, and of Nineveh; not because God is a respecter of persons, but because the Jews were abominably wicked with the light and knowledge they had of God and his Law before other nations. Testimony to this subject, can be adduced from the Bible in abundance, if required; but we will forbear in this article, as it is too lengthy already. We will therefore conclude, by bringing up a few more scriptural testimonies, that bear upon the kingdom of our text.

The Lord saith, "Look upon zion, the city of our solemnities. Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams. * * * For the Lord is our Judge, he is our Lawgiver, the Lord our King. * * * And the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity;" Isaiah 33: 20—24. Well may Paul say "Wherefore we, receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved;" Heb. 12: 28. We are fully convinced, that the Jews cannot build such a Jerusalem, or a tabernacle as described above, that cannot be taken down; hence we look for one whose builder and maker is God, when "the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isaiah 24: 23. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of zion;" Psalms 2: 6. "For the Lord has chosen; he has desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever: here will I dwell: for I desire it, there will I make the horn of David bud, but upon himself shall his crown flourish;" Psalm 132: 13—18.

Once more, this kingdom, which the Lord God shall set up, which the saints shall possess forever, even forever and ever, if it is on earth so long cursed by reason of sin, needs but (Christ's) appearing and blessing. His glory is sufficient to make every desert smiling and lovely, above that of an Eden. Then the moon shall be confounded and ashamed, when the Lord of hosts, shall reign in mount zion, and Jerusalem; and it shall be said, the tabernacle of God is with them, and they are his people; and they shall not hunger or thirst, for the Lamb shall lead and feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of water.

No Bible—Then What.

Nay more; take away the Bible, and you take away the Lord Jesus Christ. No longer need any disputes be held in regard to the nature, person or office of Christ, his history, condition or destiny! All the magnificient, apparatus in preparation for his coming is gone! The cross crumbles, and the Sepulcher sinks, and the throne symbolized by the rainbow that adorns it, like the rainbow vanishes away. His pre-existence, his current existence, his whole existence, is nothing.

And so of the Holy Spirit; take away the Bible, and the Spirit becomes a ghost, indeed, or rather less than a ghost. Like a meteor, it flashes from darkness and falls into the blackness of darkness. And so the Father; take away the Bible, and the Father retires into an impenetrable seclusion, infinitely more obvious than was ever imagined before. And then, when the earth is exhausted of everything angelic, and the universe of everything divine, what is left?

What! is man left? Aha! be it so. But what kind of a man is left? A man without a Maker, without a Savior, without a purpose, and without an end. The noblest of beings, and yet the meanest and most miserable—all sensibility, sympathy, and affection, yet desolate, in sackcloth, among the graves of dead friends; full, himself, of living memories, ever mourning for the dead, but without hope of their return; having no hope but that he and his children may likewise die and be no more! And what kind of an earth is left? And what kind of a heaven? And what kind of a universe? Who cares what kind? If a man be a worm, if angels be the specters of worms, if Father, Son, and Holy Ghost be mere names without subsistance—who cares what kind?—The Book Above All.

Love of God.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." 1 John 3; 1.

These words were spoken by the apostle John, to the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, admonishing them in the name of Jesus, that they should not sin. Well might the apostle say, "My little children, these things write I unto you that ye sin not; and if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous." The apostle well knew, when writing this letter to his brethren, that they too needed words of comfort or consolation.

Now he goes further and says, 2nd verse, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Taking these passages into consideration, I cannot help but think, that these are indeed words of comfort to those who profess to be the children of God. To those who are yet outside of the ark of safety, and are yet roving abroad as it were on the barren mountain of sin and folly, let me say, your enjoyment in this world is vain—but a moment, and all your pleasures in this world will end. Yes, sinner, oh, yes; how very soon may you be called from this stage of action to meet an angry God, there to give an account of your deeds done here in the body! Do you not often feel, sinner, that Jesus who died to save poor sinners—that he who made heaven and earth stands at the door of your hearts, pleading with you, and asking you for admittance; pleading with you to turn from your perilous condition and seek him while he may be found? "To-day," he says, "When ye hear my voice, harden not your hearts." But, alas! it is too often the case with us poor, sinful, fallen creatures that we disregard calls while hastening to our future destiny. But there is a time and hour fast drawing nigh, when these innumerable privileges that have been granted unto us, from time to time, will end; when Christ will make his appearance in the clouds of heaven, with the holy angels to gather his jewels home, and to take vengeance upon those who have not done his will.

Why Redemption is Great.

Redemption is great in its final deliverance. There is a hell. Rationalism rules it out; but there is where our modern essayists and the Bible differ. People say there ought not to be a hell; but there is where modern theologians and the Lord God Almighty differ. I am one of those benighted mortals in this day who take the whole Bible. "What! you do not believe everything in it?" Everything! Absolutely everything! "What is that about the serpent in Eden? and the sun standing still? and the whale swallowing?" Every thing! I believe it all as much as I do in my own existence. "Well, then, you can not have read the arguments on the other side." Yes, I have read them day and night; read them by the year; read every word that Tom Paine, or Theodore Parker, or Renan ever wrote on the subject; read them from the title-page to the last word of the last line of the last page, of the last book; read them until it is only through the mercy of God that I did not kill my soul through the sin of reading them; read them until I found out that the land of skepticism is a desert, where the sands are red-hot coals, swept by the smothering simoom of all-consuming wretchedness, read them until I have found there are two hells instead of one—the hell of skepticism and the hell spoken of in the Bible; and I believe in the last because it is the more tolerable. Come to my house sometime, at six o'clock in the evening, and I will show you fifty-four passages in the Bible, all positively asserting that there is such a place, and as many more implying it. If I do not believe when he tells me a thing ten times, certainly I will when he tells it to me twenty times. If I do not believe what he has asserted twenty times, I will when he has told it to me forty times. But If I doubt him the fortieth time, certainly I will when he announces a thing to me the fifty-fourth time. I had better accept it. Paul says: "They shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord." Luke says: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourself thrust out." Christ, who ought to know, says, "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." It is not more certain that there is a city called Constantinople or Moscow, than there is a great metropolis of suffering; that Satan rules over it; that there are fires that cannot be put out, and tears that never fall, and groans that are forever uttered. When a man gets into that place he never gets out.

There may be a difference of opinion about the exact nature of that suffering. You may, if you like, discard the old-fashioned notion of fire, but the Bible in many places says that the suffering is like fire; and if it is like fire, it is as severe as fire, it might as well be fire. You say it is mental torture, and not physical. But you know that mental torture is worse than physical. So the style of suffering that you believe in is far more intolerable than the style of suffering your fathers and mothers used to believe in. A dying man of large means said: "I would give thirty thousand pounds to have it proved to me satisfactorily that there is no hell." Such proof cannot be presented. But suppose you throw overboard most of the testimony on this subject—is there not some slight possibility that there may be such a place? If there should be and you have no preparation to escape it, what then? A young woman, dying said to her father: Father, why did you not tell me there was such a place?" "What place?" "A hell!" He said: "Jenny, there is no such place. God is merciful. There will be no future suffering!" She said: "I know better! I feel it now! I know there is such a place! My feet are slipping into it this moment! I am lost! Why did you not tell me there was such a place?" It is the awful, stupendous, consuming, incontrovertible fact of the universe.—Talmage.

The Whole Duty of Man.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. Eccl. 12: 13.

Dear reader, allow me to introduce a few ideas on this important subject. Why is it that man is not more earnestly engaged in performing his duty towards God? Is it because of worldly lusts? All these things are vain. Satan is trying to deceive his servants by telling them they are doing what is required of them. He encourages them in all the foolish ways and fashions. Methinks I hear a voice say, who are Satan's servants? I will try to explain: They who have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. It is written "He that knows to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin;" James 4: 17. Jesus says, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for I am meek and lowly in spirit." Some one may ask, how can we learn of Christ? "Knock and it shall be opened unto you." Then you are at liberty to enter and become instructed in his ways. After that comes obedience, which will lead you into the river of Jordan, the way which Jesus himself has taken. He has said, "I am the way, the truth, the life, and no man comes to the Father, but by me." Be sure then that you have taken the right course, and continue thereon until death; then you will wear the crown, prepared for all the righteous.

The apostle Paul says, "Let not your good be evil spoken of. But let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Be sure that you honor God and not man, for God is a Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. Paul also says, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is in Jesus Christ." Let us then be careful whereon we build, "lest we be liken unto the foolish man." We must make Christ the chief corner stone, that we may withstand all the fiery darts of Satan.

May the blessing of God rest upon us all "and in dieu time we shall reap if we faint not." In love,

G. L. KING.

Colorado for Invalids.

Dr. Bancroft, of Denver, contributes the following to the Springfield Republican, respecting the health and advantages of our Colorado climate:

"In reply to your questions concerning the climate of Colorado, and the nature of diseases most benefitted by it, I will give you as briefly as possible, the results of my experience. During a five year's residence in this Territory, I have seen a large number of invalids who have sought this climate for its salutary effect upon diseases of the lungs. Many of this number have either been improved or entirely restored to health; others have returned home disappointed without receiving any apparent benefit, and a few have gone down to the grave here. Those who have received no improvement, have, in the majority of instances, been in the advanced stages of these diseases, while a few have been imprudent, or have not selected the most desirable places for residences.

"Our climate is genial and dry; the annual fall of rain does not exceed twelve or fourteen inches, the greater portion falling in March and April. Light and dry snows come during the winter, but do not remain long on the ground. The dews are light and disappear altogether during the summer and autumn. There are but few cloudy days in the year, and fogs are scarcely ever seen. The air is pure, dry and bracing, sudden changes in the temperature are common at all seasons, but, as the dryness of the atmosphere lessons its powers of conducting heat, the variations affect the human system less than they would in damp localities. Cattle in huge herds wander over our hills and plains, finding sustenance all the year around in the prairie grass; therefore beef is good, plentiful and cheap, which is an advantage to the country, second only to its air, it being a known fact that in regions where there is an abundance of beef, with all its rich, blood-making qualities, within the reach of every family, pulmonary consumption is rarely prevalent.

There is more than health to be gained in this new and growing country; positions of prominence in social, professional and business circles are more easily attained than in older and larger communities; wherefore a person may be said to gain two lives, who leaves in time a climate in which his existence would be but a weary fight against disease, for a home where all the powers of body and mind can find full and free development.

* * * * * *

"The towns situated anywhere within from one to twenty miles of the base of the mountains, at an elevation of not more than 5,000 or 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, are the best suited for the consumptives. The places are protected from the cool, dry winds from the north, by spurs or 'divides,' which run out at right angles from the range, and the air is tempered in winter from extremes of cold, by a warm, bright, and genial sun, and, in the summer, from the extremes of heat, by the cool breezes which constantly flow down through the canons, from the snowy range, in the plains below. These breezes possess a little moisture, gained by absorption from the melting snow and, mingling with the dry atmosphere of the prairies, relieve it of any harshness which it my possess."

Choice Paragraphs.

The only way to meet affliction is to pass through it solemnly, slowly, with humility and faith, as the Israelites passed through the sea. Then its very waves of misery will divide and become to us a wall on the right side and on the left, until the gulf narrows before our eyes, and we land safe on the opposite shore.—Miss Mulock.

Who will pray, must know and understand that prayer is an earnest and familiar talking with God, to whom we declare our miseries, whose support and help we implore and desire in our adversities, and whom we laud and praise for our benefits received. So that prayer containeth the exposition of our troubles, the desire of God's defense, and praising his magnificient name, as the Psalms of David clearly do teach.—John Knox.

Sometimes when we think we have faith, it isn't faith in God; it is faith in our banker's book or our pocket. I've often had that sort of faith. I have thought I trusted God, because I knew there was plenty of money in the till, and I have found out my mistake, because a bit of faith went off with every shilling, till there was none left at all.—Living Epistle.

WORKING FOR CHRIST.—My brother, opposite your name on the church roll stand the words: "Servant of Jesus Christ." Underneath it methinks I see a pierced, blood-stained hand write, "Occupy till I come. If thou art faithful over few things, I will make the ruler over many things." The night cometh when you cannot work. Keep your hand on the plow until death loosens its grasp; and when the night comes on, you will find that the sleep of the laboring man is sweet.— Rev. T. L. Cuyler

Pleasant Dreams.

After the toils and cares of the day are over, when the shades of the night have fallen around us, sleep comes, and, touching us with her magic wand, gently lulls us into a state of forgetfulness, and for awhile, our cares and our sorrows are alike forgotten, and we live in a world of dreams.

To the old man come dreams of his boyhood: bright dreams they are; they take him away back up the stream of time, and leave him on the old play-ground where he spent so many happy hours in days gone by, and he can once more hear the sound of the merry shouts of his schoolmates—once more he is a free, gay-hearted boy, and the future is before him full of bright anticipations. But suddenly he awakes to find that it was all a dream, and that he is bent with old age, and that he has nearly finished the journey of life, and that a few days hence, he will have passed away.

The school-boys dreams are of a different nature from those of the old man. He dreams he is a man, proud and free, he sees himself a man of position and popularity, surrounded by his friends, who are congratulating him on his wonderful success. But one of his friends in congratulating him presses his hand too hard, and he awakes, with a startled look around him—awakes to find all the glory and honor gone, and that it was a dream—to find that he has many rough paths to tread, and many weary nights of study, before he can hope to reach the point of which he dreamed.

The felon, as he lies on his prison couch, can, for a while forget his gloomy surroundings in the land of dreams. He dreams of his early childhood, old home, and of his mother. Once more he wanders on the dear old farm, a sinless child; dear, familiar objects are all around him—there is the old well—the orchard and the old barn in which he so often played in innocent glee. The mother is there with her hand shading her brow, as she watches her boy at play. The night shades fall gently and slowly; the moon rises, and sheds her pale light over the scene, and the child, weary from his play, kneels at his mothers knee, and with innocent heart, folded hands, and uplifted eyes, prays, "Lead us not into temptation." But alas! too soon he opens his eyes, to find the sweet vision fled—to find that it was but a dream—and to know that there are stains of blood on his hands, and that his mother lies low in the far off church-yard, sent there by his wickedness.

May happy dreams ever visit all, comforting the sad heart, and soothing the mourner. May we all live pure, good, and true, that our dreams will always be pleasant, and bring us joy and peace.

A Young Hero.

The hard common life of the city poor is full of patient fortitude. Many of the world's grand heroes live, and suffer manfully, and die by inches with Christian heroism, all unknown to fame. The following to true nobility and genuine child faith in one of the lowest of the London poor, is given by John B. Gouch:

A friend of mine, seeking to relieve the poor, came to a flight of stairs that led to a door which led into a room reaching under the slates. He knocked. A feeble voice said "Come in," and he went in. There was no light, but as soon as his eyes became adapted to the place, he saw, lying upon a heap of chips and shavings, a boy about ten years of age, pale, but with a sweet face.

"What are you doing there?" he asked of the boy.

"Hush! hush! I am hiding."

"Hiding! What for?" And he showed his white arms covered with bruises and swollen.

"Who was it that beat you like that?"

"Don't tell him; my father did it."

"What for?"

"Father got drunk, and beat me because I wouldn't steal."

"Did you ever steal?"

"Yes, sir, I was a thief once." (These London thieves never hesitate to acknowledge it—it is their profession.)

"Then why don't you steal now?"

"Because I went to the ragged-school and they told me, 'Thou shalt not steal,' and they told me of God in heaven. I will not steal, sir, if my father kills me."

Said my friend: "I don't know what to do with you. Here is a shilling. I will see what I can do for you."

The boy looked at it a moment, and then said:

"But, please, sir, wouldn't you like to hear my little hymn?"

My friend thought it strange that without food, without fire, bruised and beaten, as he lay there, he could sing a hymn; but he said: "Yes I will hear you." And then in a sweet voice, he sang:

"Gentle Jesus, meek and mild,
Look upon a little child:
Pity my infirmity,
Suffer me to come to Thee.

Fain would I to Thee be brought;
Gentle Lord, forbid it not;
In the kingdom of Thy grace,
Give a little child a place."

"That's my little hymn; good-by!"

The gentleman went again in the morning; went upstairs; knocked at the door—no answer; opened it and went in. The shilling lay on the floor. There lay the boy with a smile on his face—but he was dead. In the night he had gone home. Thank God that he has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me!" He is no respecter of persons, black or white, bond or free, young or old. He sends his angels to the homes of the poor and the destitute, the degraded and the wicked, to bring the blood-bought little ones to his home.

One Sows, Another Reaps.

Some months back, one Sunday evening, a young woman came to the tabernacle. At half-past six she was careless and unconverted; at nine she was rejoicing in Christ.

Feeling deeply anxious for the reality of this sudden change, I closely questioned her. "Oh, sir," she replied, "will not mother be glad! Why, she has been praying for me for twenty years."

I understood it then. I was only reaping in the field carefully tilled by a loving mother's prayer, how its power prevails!

Take the fact of Sunday-school effort, Bible classes, and prayer meetings—how continually is the pastor reaping the fruits of others' labor! How often the sower overtakes the reaper! Even so blessed is the fellowship of toil.—Henry Varley, London.

DALE CITY, PA., Oct. 22, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

TUESDAY, Oct. 1st. Preached at the Brethren's meeting-house again in the evening. Lodged at brother Andrew Snowberger's. They are in middling health. Brother Snowberger is declining, having attained his three score and ten. He has been laboring in the Master's cause for a number of years, and although his time of service has about expired, his interest is unabated.

WEDNESDAY, 2nd. Brother Henry Harshbarger sent his son with conveyance to take us to brother Daniel Harshbarger's, where Elder Jacob Steel was awaiting our arrival, where he received us, and conveyed us to his house, by about two o'clock in the afternoon.

We are now in the Hopewell congregation, of which brother Steel is the house-keeper, and brother Henry Clapper and his son David S. Clapper are ministers. This branch and the Snake Spring Valley had been one, until last Spring when it was divided. When brother Steel moved into the Snake Spring Valley congregation, brother Isaac Ritchey had the oversight of the church, and was ordained several years afterward, with John Holsinger, our grandfather. Ritchey was succeeded for a few years only by Elder Jacob Snyder, when he died. Since then Elder Steel has been presiding. At present he reports the congregation in a prosperous condition. One thing we are glad to remark. Brother Steel was for many years an inveterate tobacco chewer, and he is now abandoning the habit. Hope the Lord will give him strength to overcome the old enemy completely, and thus give proof to what we have so often affirmed, that any one can quit it if he wills to do so. But it will only be jumping out of the frying pan into the fire, to quit chewing and take to smoking.

Preached at the Steel meeting-house in the evening. The attention was good enough for the preaching

THURSDAY, 3rd, Preached at 10 A. M. to a good week-day congregation, principally members of the church. While in the midst of our discourse a brother took fits falling violently to the floor. It being something unusual to us, we were badly scared, and took our seat, and the remainder of our discourse was disconnected. At the close of the day it was announced that next day a sister Burket would be buried.

In the afternoon brother John B. Dilling gave us the use of his buggy to ride to his place, which lies in the direction of Saxton, whence we landed in good time for supper. They are pleasantly fixed, and are enjoying life about as comfortably as the rest of mankind. Preached in their school-house at night, to an attentive audience. The Brethren of this vicinity are thinking of building a meeting-house.

FRIDAY, 4th. After entertaining us for the night, brother Dilling sent his son with conveyance to take us to Saxton. Thence by railroad to James Creek. Brother John Brumbaugh met us at Marklesburg station and conveyed us to brother Henry B. Brumbaugh's, where we spent the remainder of the day very pleasantly. Preached at the James Creek meeting-house in the evening. Good at attention. Lodged with the family of our late brother Isaac Brumbaugh.

SATURDAY, 5th. Meeting at the meeting-house again at 10 A. M. Very good attendance for a week-day, and we trust the brethren and sisters received some encouragement by coming to the house of the Lord.

Dined at brother Robert Mason's in company with brother and sister George Brumbaugh, Elder of the church at James Creek. After spending another short season at brother H. B. Brumbaugh's, brother Mason took us to the station where we took the train for Tyrone. Meeting brother and sister Quinn at the station, we changed cars and run out to Bald Eagle station. Here brother James Cox met us and conveyed us to his house, at the Cross Roads where we lodged. There was preaching at the meeting-house, but we were too late for it.

SUNDAY, 6th. Preached at the meeting-house at 10 A. M. and in the evening. Had a very good attendance, and good listeners. It gave us much pleasure to meet our old neighbors and friends once more, and to talk to them the things that pertain to the salvation of our souls. Dined with the family of our late brother Jacob Beck, and had a pleasant interview with our mute friends. Lodged at brother Patton Cox's, by the meeting-house, in company with brother Grabill Myers.

MONDAY, 7th. This day had been set apart for visiting at Tyrone, but we could not reach town on account of the heavy rains. Dined at brother Evan Nearhoof's. As the rain abated in the afternoon, we took the train at Bald Eagle, and reached town about 6 P. M. Lodged at brother W. M. Quinn's.

TUESDAY, 8th. Met a host of our old Tyrone friends, and passed a few friendly words. Found our way to the meeting-house again by noon. The love-feast is to be held here this evening. At two o'clock an election was held for a minister and a deacon. Brother Conrad Imler was chosen to the ministry, and brother James S. Cox, deacon. The brethren were then installed to their office, and then a short intermission was granted. At four o'clock the examination services commenced, and in the evening the ordinances were observed according to the order of God's word. Had very good order and attention.

In company with a number of other friends we lodged at sister Margaret Autelberger's, where we have three more deaf and dumb acquaintances, who were glad to see us.

WEDNESDAY, 9th. Visited brother Robert Henderson's, and sister Madison, at Birmingham, and thence to Tyrone where we spent the remainder of the day in visiting old friends, &c. Of course we stopped at brother Quinn's. And here we are writing out this report. All in pretty good order. Yesterday was election day, and this evening it is said: "The country is safe." Hope it is true. It generally is safe after the election.

THURSDAY, Oct. 10. After a pleasant morning with our friends at Tyrone, we took the train, at 8:32 A. M. Tyrone has made great improvements during the year of our absence. The streets have been graded, and many new buildings have been erected, some of them fine business places. With Tyrone's enterprise, our Dale City would double itself every six months, (?) having the facilities it does have. Our old office has been converted into a furniture establishment, and makes rather an attractive appearance. But the cars soon conveyed us out of sight of our old home, and for awhile at least we shall not see it; but there are many kind friends whom we shall long remember.

At Huntingdon we were joined by brother and sister H. B. Brumbaugh, and their son Harry.

Our company landed safely at Mt. Union at 9:30, and were met by brother Robert Wakefield, and conveyed to his house for dinner. Brother Robert is the youngest minister in this, Aughwick congregation. After dinner we found our way to the meeting house, where the love-feast was appointed to be held, and when we arrived at two o'clock, services had already commenced. Brother S. R. Zug, of Lancaster county, and brother Isaac Eby, of Pery county were present. Had a pleasant season of about two hours. Then an intermission of about half an hour. Then the examination exercises commenced, and continued until near sundown, which made it rather late to commence the evening ordinances. Nevertheless the exercises closed by nine o'clock, apparently in good order. We had a good meeting.

Lodged at brother Peter L Swine's, whose family we had not before visited Found them pleasantly situated. Brother Peter is in the fruit business, and we had an abundance of the best of grapes to eat. If the reader wishes to purchase grapes let him address as above at Shirleysburg, Pa.

FRIDAY, 12th. There was preaching again in the forenoon, and a reasonable attendance, of attentive listeners. Brother Zug spoke in the German language from Rom. 8: 1, and was followed by brother H.B. Brumbaugh, from Luke 2: 30. Both discourses were interesting and instructive. This was our last meeting in this branch of the church, and we took leave of the brethren. This is an old congregation. It was organized with six members, Christian Long and wife, and two brethren Secrists, and their wives. They held a love-feast, and at the same time a choice for a minister, which fell upon brother Christian Long, Sen., who received five of the six votes. He was therefore their first minister, and Elder. Jacob Lutzy was the second. A brother Hanawalt was next elected. Then followed Peter Long. Andrew Spanogle and John King, Michael Bollinger, Christian Long and Grabill Myers, John G. Glock, John Spanogle, Abraham Funk, Enoch Eby, George Myers, P. L. Swine, J. R. Lane, Christian Myers, John Garver, Isaac Book, and Robert Wakefield. A number of these have moved away, and have become Elders of other congregations. One Abraham Price was also elected, who wished to be relieved of the office, which being granted, he joined the Roman Catholics. The congregation has twice held the Annual Meeting, and held the first District Meeting, of the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

In the afternoon brother Swine sent his son with conveyance, and took us to Mt. Union. Stopped with Peter Bare, by the invitation of his wife, sister Catharine, where we are lodging, and are comfortably situated.

SATURDAY, 12th. After enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Bare and family, for the night, we took the train for McVeytown, where we landed at about half past ten A. M., in company with a number of brethren and sisters. Our young sister Mollie Spangler conducted us to the house of brother Abraham Myers, where we were kindly received. Preached in the Mattawana school-house in the evening, to a full house of attentive listeners. Brother S. R. Zug assisted in the labor. We are becoming quite intimate. We always thought well of brother Z., but we love him more since we know him better. Lodged at brother Myer's.

SUNDAY, 13th. Attended the regular forenoon meeting of the Brethren, at the Spring Run meeting-house. The house was about full, and we had a good meeting. Foreign ministers present: John L. Beaver, of Buffalo Valley; John B. Garver, Robert Wakefield, Aughwick; and brother Zug, and the brethren from the Lewistown, or Dry Valley branch, but they did not take their places behind the table, feeling themselves at home here.

Dined at brother Peter S. Myer's, with a number of other friends, as a general dinner was not announced at the meeting-house, and the love-feast was published to begin at one o'clock.

At the appointed time, or soon thereafter, public services were again opened, and continued for about two hours, we trust to profit. Then an election was held, in which brother Adam Rupert was chosen to the office of Deacon, and the church agreed to advance brother Abraham Myers to the second degree in the ministry. We made no discovery in the holding of this election, only that we observed a great inconvenience in requiring all those aged members to climb a long flight of stairs to give in their voice. It appears to us, as much voting as we have to do in our church, our meeting-houses should be provided with a small jury box, with a window, at which each member might give in his choice, and then pass on. This could be done at a very small expense, by having a few wide or pannelled boards connected by hinges, which, when not wanted, could be folded up and put away, or set up on ends, in a circle or at angles, when needed.

After the election the examination exercises were begun, and conducted with much solemnity. The remarks of the brethren were to the point, and the point itself is known to be a sharp one. Self examintion is an important exercise. A large number of members communed in the evening, all the available space being occupied with tables. If the congregations continue to increase for a few years longer, our houses will be too small to accomodate the members. Then what will we do? "Divide the congregations, says one, "and build more meeting-houses." That will do, providing we will then also adapt ourselves to the circumstances, for if we were to build ever so many houses and then still all come together to one house we would not help the matter any. We would therefore suggest that we make it a rule for our members to commune at home, at the communion meeting in their own congregation. Then they will not need to partake at the other meetings they may attend. Then let it be uderstood that the home members should first take their seats at the tables. Then if their is room left, let those be invited who may not have had an opportunity to participate at home or elsewhere. After that, if there is room, let the invitation be general to the members. We think this plan would work very well. We have known members to be croweded out at home, who were too poor to go away from home, by other members taking their places who had been attending a dozen meetings in succession. All this is for want of knowing the state of affairs; and it would have caused such members much uneasiness if they had known it at the time. Think of these suggestions, and use them as you think to the honor of God.

We had a good meeting at Spring Run.

Attention Agents!

Having a little breathing time, and coming to ourself, we discover that we are rapidly approaching the close of the present volume. About eight numbers and we shall reach No. 50. So we now offer all the remaining numbers of the present volume free to new subscribers for 1873. But be it understood, all the numbers remaining at the time that the subscriptions are received, and only back Nos. when we may have them. Hope our friends may secure us a few new names in each congregation, by the offer.

The time will soon be at hand for sending out our prospectus for 1873. Hope our agents will keep on the look out for them, and get their hand into the business by soliciting a few new subscribers.

We hope, too that our friends will keep on talking about our proposed change to the folio form, the common newspaper form, and all become strongly favorable to the change. When we get home, and have time to spread ourself a little we mean to answer some of the objections to the change, and give sufficient reasons for it.

Octavo and Folio.

As there has been a desire expressed to change the form of the C. F. C. to a folio form, we will here give our views of the matter.

1. The greater pourtion of the spiritual subjects are written on by our brethren and sisters, who spend their time in composing and writing. Then it goes through the editor's hands for correction and is pronounced good. When it comes out in print it is read with great interest by many.

2. We do not expect that all will get them bound: yet there are a few that will, and many will file them away in the present form. When in the news paper form never.

3. We would not like to see our spiritual periodicals used as public newspapers.

4. We do believe that the C. F. C. would be read with great interest one hundred years from now. What brother or sister have we, that would not like to read the oldest print, and especially from the Brethren's hands?

5. All the change we would like to see, is, a colored cover to admit advertising.

What we have written is out of love, with a pure motive for the better, hoping that it may meet the approbation of many more. If so, let them acknowledge it through the C. F. C.

How Is It?

In a communication dated Oct. 13th brother P. H. Beaver says:

During the past week I received, by mail, an old, stray copy of the Companion, marked Vol. 5, No. 5, and dated Tyrone, Pa., Tuesday, Feb. 2, 1869, with my name and address printed on the margin, and upon referring to my file, I find we have this No., with no name or address printed on the margin. Has this copy been astray in the mails, lo! these 3 years and 8 months? How is it?

Remark: We mailed that paper 3 years 8 months ago, farther we say not.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., September 25, 1872.

Brother Holsinger:— The following editorial, cut from the Public Record of this date, is offered for the columns of the COMPANION. The fact, of which it treats, shows that man, vested with "a little brief authority," frequently claims the honor for himself, which belongs only to God, and in his arrogance tramples on the rights and even consciences of his fellow beings to attain it.

SILAS THOMAS.

HAVE QUAKERS NO RELIGIOUS RIGHTS IN THE QUAKER CITY?— Judge Allison, in the court of quarter sessions, has peremptorily insisted upon the removal of the hats of members of the society of Friends, or Quakers, who, after being summoned to act as jurors, desired to adhere to one of the ancient usages of their society, by remaining covered in the presence of the honorable court. This judicial decision or action is a remarkable departure from a time-honored custom, and it excites surprise not unmingled with indignation. If there are any good reasons for it they should be very plainly stated, but, in the absence of an explanation, it certainly appears very singular that in a city and a commonwealth founded by a distinguished member of the society of Friends, for the purpose of enabling them, as well as members of all other religious denominations, to give full bent to all conscientious convictions which did not inflict positive injury upon society, an order should be issued which finds its nearest parallel in the edicts of English judges that drove many of the early settlers of Pennsylvania to her free soil for protection. William Penn and his followers came here to escape the annoyance of a series of judical persecutions embracing such orders as Judge Allison has just issued. And in the series of laws agreed upon in England for the government of Pennsylvania, before any considerable body of colonists had set sail for our shores, William Penn enunciated as one of the laws that should "be forever held for fundamental" a provision "that in all courts all persons of all persuasions may freely appear in their own way, and according to their own manner, and there personally plead their own cause themselves, or, if unable, by their friends." This and other clauses of the original law of the commonwealth gave to the Friends the privilege of following the dictates of their conscience, not merely in the matter of remaining with their heads covered in the presence of high dignitaries, but in the more important affairs of giving legal testimony by substituting an affirmation for an oath, and of contracting a legal marriage without the aid of a priest or preacher. And now, since these customs have passed unquestioned for nearly two hundred years, thus gaining the force and sanction of a common law that is worthy of infinitely more respect than the volumes of statutes that are turned out by existing legislative machinery, good and cogent reasons should certainly be given by any judge who undertakes to infringe any one of them, and to make the courts of the "Quaker city" the scene of a performance akin to those which occurred in the courts of England during the reign of Charles II. Among the thousands of evils that have afflicted this commonwealth since its foundation we have never yet heard of any serious mischief resulting from the Quaker custom of wearing a hat in the presence of an honorable court; and we cannot but consider the city of Philadelphia pre-eminently fortunate if her court of quarter sessions has attained, in all its surroundings, such unspotted purity that the wearing of a hat by a Quaker juror has become the most necessary and important object of judical concern. We had supposed (perhaps ignorantly) that the spirit of the age tended to increase respect for the conscientious scruples of witnesses and jurors, instead of the opposite and reactionary direction, leading to a restoration of an antiquated English rule of court. The members of one sect, who frequently testify in our courts are permitted to wear their hats at the moment when they take an oath as witnesses, and it is not easy to see why a prolonged employment of the hat as a covering of the head, when it is prompted by a conscientious motive, in the case of the Quaker, should not also be permitted. The diverse creeds existing in this country all have a certain degree of deference paid to their peculiar usages, when their members are summoned to appear as jurors or witnesses, and it seems passing strange that a well-established custom of the Quakers should be assailed in the Quaker city.

Dear Editor: I take this present opportunity to inform you, and all the rest of our friends, that we have pitched our tent, for a while, at Clarksville, Butler county, Iowa; hence our address will be at that place. As some of our friends, might wonder why we left Mechanicsburg, Sangamon county, Ills., I will say we left there on account of husband's ill-health. He had been suffering for nearly two years, with bronchial asthma, and the physician could not relieve him, but told him that the only relief would be to go north. We have done so, and he is much better. Hope he may get well again.

A few words more. I got the COMPANION just the day before I left Mechanicsburg, in which I noticed a reply to my article on the Gates of Hell, but the paper was mislaid in our hurry to start, and the author's name forgotten, hence we could not reply. But I do not know whether it is required of the sower to stop and chase the birds, or to return and pull up the thorns.

LEAH CRONCE.

LOUISBURG, KANSAS. Oct. 8th.

Dear Companion: I will drop you a few hasty lines, informing your readers I left my home in West Va., October 1st. Came by way of Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Kansas City to this point, where I arrived the fourth of this month, and am once more permitted to breathe the fresh breeze of the western prairies. Last Sunday had preaching in this town. The day was fine, the congregation large, and attention good. This, to all appearances, seems to be a good section of the great west. Have fine lands here, excellent spring water, and running streams. It is undoubtedly a healthy section, as much so I think as any section I have visited of the west. Building-stone is plenty; coal near at hand; and as a fruit country it certainly is good especially in way of peaches, grapes, and small fruits. Apples from all indications will do fine also. The people are enterprising and have a great regard for learning, judging from the fine houses of learning to be seen on every side. In religion there is truly a mixture of sects and isms. I have met with one member of the fraternity of the brethren near this place. Also met with brother Daniel Longanecker at Paola, yesterday. He informs me there are a number in this county west of here. I am in usual health and think I am recruiting up some from the lassitude of my over-worked mental faculties and vocal organs; hoping by the grace of God to soon be able for active duty again. In a short time I leave for Missouri.

Farewell,

J. S. FLORY.

Queries.

Who or what does the apostle Paul mean by "the prince of the power of the air?" Ephesians 2: 2. Some, I believe, apply this to Satan, or the devil. If this is correct, in what respect is he "the prince of the power of the air?"

G. S. WINE.

Will some brother be so kind as to give an explanation of the 3rd verse of the 2nd Psalm?

In perusing this Psalm to-day, many sad things presented themselves to my mind, because of the readiness of the human family, being so ready and willing to reject the courses of God, their kind and beneficent Creator, in whom they live, move, &c., and from whom they are blessed with all the comforts and necessaries of existance. It is deplorable to know that poor mortals will treat the precepts, examples, and commandments of the Lord with careless respect, and assert, presumptuously, that this commandment, and that one is non-essential as regards our future and eternal happiness or interest. The Lord is long suffering, and slow to anger, otherwise certainly would visit us with a tenable retribution for our contemptible and disdainful treatment of his most holy, perfect, and immaculate will. I am made to wonder when I reflect and meditate upon the course we feeble beings will pursue, when it seems it is entirely antagonistsic to the Gospel of Christ. To err is human, I suppose; therefore, we need not marvel at the averse way of man. May God's word convince and convert us to the true light, as it was revealed by his Son our Saviour, that we all may ultimately reach his holy abode, to be heirs and joint heirs with Christ forever, in the celestial regions of eternal glory, is my prayer.

B. S. WHITTEN.

Joseph F. Stouffer has been for several years living in the states of Ohio and Illinois, and correspondence was kept up between him and his parents until about ten months ago. Since that we are not able to hear from him. His last post-office address was Macon, Macon county, Ill. He was a member of the church of the brethren, unmarried when last heard from. As we all feel anxious to know what has become of him, fearing something sad has befallen him, we trust this notice may reach some of the brethren who may be able to give us some information. Address D. F. STOUFFER, Beaverdale, Washington Co., Md.

KLAMATH, CAL.,) September 25th, 1872.)

Brethren Editors: — After a long time, I take the present opportunity of writing you a short letter, but I am not in my usual writing mood, so that I cannot write as I would like.

Since my last I have been wandering around from place to place, and have enjoyed myself quite well, but when I come to think of other places where I have been, it mars my pleasure here in this country. The place from which I write is quite a wild and romantic place; the ocean, with its ever rolling waves dashing on the rocks, in its wild career, on the the west, and the huge mountains, whose summits almost reach the clouds, on the east; while north and south are hills and valleys. A few miles below where we are camped, live, in undisturbed dominion, a tribe of the aboriginals. Here, in their primitive simplicity and filthy ways, can these wild men be seen, as in the early days of our country. True they have imbibed many of the vices of the white men, but none of their virtues for the fact is the white men, generally speaking, have lost or never had any virtue, especially in these parts. I paid a visit a few days ago to them, and was much interested in what I saw, a few things I will state, perhaps some will be interested.

1. Manner of cooking. They have no pots, &c. but on the contrary, do their cooking in baskets. This may appear strange, but they certainly do so. They put their meats, &c., into the baskets; and then having heated the flinty rocks they put them into the baskets and soon have it cooked. They dig holes in the sand in which they mix their bread, and bake in the ashes. Fish they roast by placing on sticks close to the fire. I was not hungry while there, so I can't tell whether the cooking is savory or not. Looks were plenty for me. Their houses or cabins are mere nothings, very primitive indeed. Some of the natives were very tidily dressed, some poorly, and others like Adam at one time. The men are a lazy, shiftless set, while the squaws have to do all the work that is done. I think the squaws ought to petition for "Women's Rights," for in fact they need them, for while their pale-faced sisters are trying to croc, and are strutting round over the country making speeches, they are at home here, planning and working for their families, while———I perceive I am digressing somewhat. They have been holding a spirit dance for about two weeks, their object I believe is, to dance all the dead Indians into the new hunting ground, or some such place. They bury their dead as all other Indians, by putting in and on the grave all their hunting instruments, tackle, baskets &c., &c.

I have often been asked my opinion of this country, but do not like to speak of a place unless I am acquainted pretty well, but as far as I have seen, and for the time I have been here, I say as I did when I first came, that it is of little account. True, the timber here is a source of great wealth to rich men, and so are the stock ranges, but the agricultural part of the coast is about 1 to 1000, small, and not first quality either. Wages are good, but not many get work, for they do not need many. It is quite healthy for some, and others cannot enjoy the climate, the air is too rarified. Remember I speak only of the coast country. Inland I am told is the finest country in America, and if I live I will see it soon. I like to live here, and for hunting I have never been in a place where I enjoyed better, for here we have bear, panther, lion, elk, deer, &c., in abundance: in fact it is a hunters paradise, if there is such a place, but one thing is lacking here, which I sometimes thought I could get along very well without, and that is society. We have, it is true, a species of society, but it is such that I do not fancy in the least, for it will not bear analyzing, much less commending to any one. I have not heard a sermon or been inside a church since April. Here, in this country very little attention is paid to any of the means of grace. Many disbelievers and downright infidels are here, and to talk with them on religion, and the Bible is as throwing words away, for I would rather hear the diggers (Indians) sing, than hear their tirades against the Bible. I hope they may all see the errors of their ways and turn from them—but I would not be understood that all are such, for many fine and religious men are here.

As this is the time of the year in which "love-feasts" are held, no doubt the Brethren are made to rejoice, and all I can do is to wish you joy in your feasts. I wish I was with the Brethren again, and I cherish the hope that I may find some of them before another year rolls away. With my best wishes and respects to all the brethren and friends, I remain yours in love.

J. S. MCFADDEN.

Brother Holsinger: By your permission, I will give your readers a few of the many notes my diary contains.

I will commence with the 15th day of September, this was the day of our love-feast in the Conemaugh church. The weather being very nice, and the congregation orderly, we had a feast of love indeed. Brethren H. R. Holsinger and E. J Blough remained with us over Sunday and labored very faithfully, may peace and plenty crown their days on earth, and heaven be their abode above.

Sunday 22nd, meeting in the old meeting-house at 10 A. M , this being the last appointment at this place until we get our new meeting-house, we tried to preach to the people assembled for the last time in the old meeting-house.

Sunday 29th, meeting at three different places at 10 A. M. We had the honor of preaching an hour to a very attentive congregation at the union meeting-house, near Conemaugh. In the evening we received the sad news of the death of a little son of brother Berkeybile.

Monday 30th, attended the funeral of the child above named. See obituary notice elsewhere. The particulars of the death of the little boy are as follows: A certain young man set a sled up against a chesnut tree, so near straight that when the little boy touched it, it fell back, and killed him almost instantly.

October 6th, by request we started for the house of brother Joseph Burkhart, of Mineral Point. On arriving found him quiteunwell and anxiously awaiting our arrival. We made his request known, and as soon as the family were in readiness, we sung a few verses, read a portion of God's word, then united in solemn prayer before God. Here we were made to feel the truth of the words of Jesus, where he says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

October 8th, by request we started for the house of Wm. Horner, in Conemaugh. On arriving found his wife suffering with pain, and just able to recognize us. Here we also met the family doctor, who told us that her time on earth was short. With tears in our eyes we attended to the duties requested of us, to the best of our ability. 4 o'clock P. M., received the news of the death of Mrs. Horner.

Oct 4th, in the Upper Deer Creek church, Cass Co., Ind., brother DANIEL C CRIPE, aged 47 years 5 months and 14 days. In him the church has lost a worthy minister, and his family an affectionate husband and father. He leaves a widowed sister and 11 children, 6 dependent ones, to mourn his loss. The church and family truly are mourning, but not as those that have no hope. The writer, being left alone in the ministry, feels sad from the departing scene. In his dying moments he assured us he had a clear title. He said he knew it would carry him through, told us to go on boldly in the cause of the Master, that the cause is a good one. Then he bade his family and all present farewell, which was solemn indeed. He was a member about twenty-nine years; nearly twelve years in the ministry, with good prospects to be useful. He had a great concern for the church and his family. Disease, inflamation of the bowels, followed by typhoid fever. Funeral occasion improved by Elder Hiel Hamilton and others, from 1st Cor. 15 : 51—58.

Her remains were silently deposited in the Brethren's grave-yard, 1½ miles north of Plattsburg. Funeral occasion improved by breth-

The subject of this notice put off his return to God until placed upon his death bed, when life was ebbing to a close he called for the Brethren and was examined and made a good confession, was received into the church, with the exception of baptism, which to his regret could not be performed, owing to the weakness of the flesh. We hope the Lord will accept the will for the deed. He leaves a wife kind parents, brothers, sisters and many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse by brother J. P. Ebersole and others.

Also in the same church, August 2nd, DAYTON KRABILL, son of John P. and Amanda Krabill, aged 2 months and 21 days. Funeral discourse by the Brethren.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer the Phrenological Journal and Christian Family Companion together for $3.50. We commend the Journal to all who want a good Family Magazine; and who don't?

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum.

VOLUME VIII. DALE CITY, PA., TUESDAY, OCT. 29, 1872. NUMBER 43.

Selected by M. REINHOLD.

Safe at Home.

Safe at home—beyond temptation,
Freed from earthly stain and sin,
Rest the blest of every nation,
By the Master garnered in!
From all lands, isles, and oceans,
Come the ransomed—once the lost,
Oh, take the tide of sweet emotions,
Surging through each white robed host!

Eyes unused to scenes of gladness
View the palms, the crown, the throne;
Hearts long crushed by pain and sadness
Throb with joy—and joy alone;
Voices plaintive from oft sighing,
Strains that rise as tear drops fall.
Jubilant are loudly singing,
"Thou, Oh Christ, art all in all!"

Lo! encompassed by the glory
Of that city bathed in light,
Far exceeding grandest story,
That a seraph ere could write,—
Walk the loved ones who beside us
On life's pathway once did roam;
Unseen dangers may betide us.—
Thanks to God, they're safe at home.

Home—elysian—a bright vision
Of thee sometimes gleams at night;
Souls then fain would leave their prison,
Homeward hast'ning in their flight,
Sweet thy peace, thy bliss immortal,
Land where parting never come;
Lord, we long to pass the portal,
And be with thee—safe at home.

From the REL. TELESCOPE.

Suffering With Christ.

One of the prominent truths of the Bible is this, that Christians are to suffer with Christ. Paul says, "If we suffer we shall also reign with him; if we deny him he will also deny us." By this it would seem that to suffer with Christ is to acknowledge him, and to refuse to suffer will be to deny him. A willingness to suffer, therefore, with him, is a sufficient guaranty that we shall reign with him when this sorrowful life is ended. On the other hand, any unwillingness to do so is a sure indication of want of love for him and his cause, and is certain to call down his displeasure. Every mourning soul at the alter of consecration, when the iniquities of a faithless and rebellious life roll upon him, and when he sees escape only by the way of the cross, then and there vows allegiance to the obligations of Christianity, among which that of suffering with Christ is not the least. Upon this there can be no cavil. It is just as necessary that Christians suffer with Christ as it was that he should suffer for them. "Christ suffered for us, the just for the unjust." Suffering seems to be necessarily connected with the work of redemption and salvation from first to last, no difference who may be engaged therein. Our Father in heaven—bless his name—suffered for us only as a divine Parent could suffer over the conduct of rebellious sons and daughters; and to demonstrate this he delivered up his only begotten and well-beloved Son to die for us. The Son suffers as a brother in the flesh, yea, even more, as one who deeply sympathizes with our lost and wretched estate. He sacrifices all and becomes poor that we might be rich. Angels sympathize with ruined men and lend their help and influence to restore him. For one half hour all harps are laid aside and solemn silence reigns in heaven, while its sympathizing hosts deeply mourn for poor men. Now, why not man, who occasions all this, and who alone is to receive benefit therefrom, why not he suffer, for a while at least, that he may be made perfect, and at last be permitted to reign with Christ in heaven? It is reasonable, it is just, it is honorable, it is praiseworthy and safe to do so. It is ignoble, inglorious, and rebellious to refuse. Christ by his suffering could redeem a world, and Christians by suffering with him may save the world. If he had refused to suffer for a lost world it never could have been redeemed; and if there were no willing Christians to suffer with him the world, though redeemed, could not be saved. Let professors of Christianity ponder these thoughts well in their hearts, and then act upon the principle of the profession which they have made; and may none give a contradiction thereto by refusing to suffer with the blessed Christ who so willingly suffered for us all. But it may be asked, "What is it to suffer with Christ?" Many are the answers which might be given to this question, but a few must suffice for the present:

1. To suffer with Christ, we must have the mind of Christ. This will prepare us fully to act our part; and any want of this will be a contradiction of the profession which we make.

2. Similar to the anxiety which our Savior felt for lost and doomed man will be that which we feel. If that anxiety caused him mental pain, it will cause the true Christian no less.

3. If the holy and good work of a suffering Savior caused him to suffer contradiction from sinners, and raised up a Judas to betray him and a Peter to deny him, and made him weep, mourn, and declare that a man's enemies were those of his own house and of his friends; and if these things caused deep suffering for the blessed Jesus, like things will cause like suffering to the Christian. Christ suffered all, though it cost him many a heart-pain and tearful eye. It will cost the Christian the same. But how few there are who can bear it. Father, help us; for we are frail indeed.

4. Christ sacrificed everything that he might be fully prepared for his work. He said, Father, here am I; send me. Yes, I will go without reserve; I will do thy will and not mine own. He left his home; he left his companions and friends, the angels; he bade his Father farewell; he disrobed himself of his glory; and this done, he travelled a long way to his mission-field—he had received appointment at the first and greatest conference ever held in the universe; and though he knew beforehand the greatness of the trails and sufferings which awaited him, he nevertheless went cheerfully to his work, and not a word of complaint ever escaped his lips. Glorious example this, and the only safe one we can follow. But who of us all are willing to subject ourselves to such sacrifices and sufferings as this? Thank God, there are those who are willing and ready to do it, and the deepest solicitude of our poor hearts is that many more were willing to thus suffer with the blessed Christ who has so willingly suffered for us. Alas! it may be that his wounded and bleeding heart is not yet healed, and that we are probing the wound still deeper, and causing him to say, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—

EXPERIENTIA.

For the COMPANION.

Change of Heart.

In olden times the functions of the brain were very imperfectly understood, and the heart was supposed to be the organ of thought; hence even at the present time, the phrase "change of heart," would imply change of mind.

It is very often asserted by revivalists, that certain denominations do not believe in a "change of heart," or, as they sometimes call it, "experimental religion" this is certainly a misrepresentation of at least some of the Baptist churches, for many of them do not only believe in one change but in three, and some have a fourth: First, there is an intellectual change, which is FAITH. This does not come suddenly, but as we read: "Faith cometh by hearing (not by praying) and hearing by the word of God." We farther read, that "without faith it is impossible to please God." Of course, we are not to believe in him as the Pagans believe in their gods. Nor will a true Christian believe in Christ as a Mahometan believes in Mahomet nor as a mormon would believe in Joe Smith, without proof of a divine origin; but an intelligent faith requires to understand the purpose of Deity—"the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ;" in short, the plan of salvation.

The second is a moral change, known as REPENTANCE; not necessarily remorse of conscience, nor "Godly sorrow for sin," but a change from wrong to right; to "Go thy way and sin no more." A man may undergo the intellectual change, and yet remain indifferent and disregard his duty to God. A valuable lesson may be learned in the parable of the sower.

The third change is a Legal change, known as BAPTISM; and is one of the requirements of New Testament Law. We have many examples on record where this law was obeyed, even by Jesus himself. Though Abraham was justified by faith alone, it is evident that his faith was made perfect by works, James ii. 22 Christianity without this legal requirement is no Christianity at all.

The fourth, is a Physical change, which is supposed to take place at the RESURRECTION or SPIRIT BIRTH of the saints. Jesus was the first to undergo this change, a little more than three years after his Baptism and just three days after his burial, when he triumphantly arose from the tomb. Before he had been a natural body, but now he is a spiritual personage; before blood flowed in his veins, now some other life-giving substance animates the Son of man, for we have evidence that his blood was shed upon the cross; before he was a mortal, but now he is an immortal man. He was the first fruits of the resurrection, and the first to bring life and immortality to light. We are commanded to seek immortality. Then how important it must be to make our calling and election sure by undergoing all these changes; namely Faith, Repentance, and Baptism, and last, but not least, the Physical change— to be born of the Spirit. See conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus.

Theatrical.

The following was written by the Rev. John Wesley, of London, in 1774, and a copy was sent to the King of England, which has put a stop to this play.

By command of the King of Kings (a), and at the desire of all those who love his appearance(b); at the Theatre of the universe (c), on the eve of Time(d), will be performed

THE GREAT ASSIZE, or DAY OF JUDGMENT.

The Scenery, which is now actually preparing, will not only surpass everything that has yet been seen, but will infinitely exceed the utmost stretch of human conception(f). There will be a just representation of all the inhabitants of the world, in their various and proper colors; and their customs and manners will be so minutely delineated, that the most secret thought will be discovered(g); ☞"For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil;" Eccl. 12: 14.

This Theatre will be laid out after a new plan, and will consist of Pit and Gallery only; and, contrary to all others, the Gallery is fitted up for the reception of people of high (or heavenly) birth, (h); and the Pit for those of low (or earthly) rank, (i).

N. B. The Gallery is very spacious (k), and the Pit without bottom (l).

To prevent inconvenience, there are separate doors, for admitting the company; and they are so different, that none can mistake that are not wilfully blind. The door which opens into the Gallery is very narrow, and the steps up to it are somewhat difficult; for which reason there are seldom many people about it (m). But the door that gives entrance into the Pit is very wide and commodious, which causes such numbers to flock to it that it is generally crowded (n).

N. B. The straight door leads towards the right hand, and the broad one, to the left (o).

It will be in vain for one with a tinseled coat, and borrowed language, to personate one of high birth, in order to get admittance into the upper places (p); for there is One of wonderful and deep penetration who will search and examine every individual (q); and all who cannot pronounce shibboleth (r) in the language of Canaan (s), or have not received a White Stone and new name (t), or cannot prove a clear title to a certain portion of the Land of Promise (u), must be turned in at the left hand door (w).

THE PRINCIPAL PERFORMERS, are described in 1 Thess. 4: 19; 2 Thess. 1: 7, 8, 9; Matth. 24: 30, 31; 25: 31, 32; Dan. 7: 9, 10; Jude 4: 14; Rev. 29: 12—15, &c. But as there are some people much better acquainted with the contents of a Play Bill than the Word of God, it may not be amiss to transcribe a verse or two for their perusal. "The Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that obey not the gospel, but to be glorified in his saints. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him. A thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him. The Judgment was set and the books were opened, and whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the Lake of Fire."

Act first, of this grand and solemn piece, will be opened by an Arch-angel with the Trump of God (x): "For the Trump shall sound and the dead shall be raised."

Act Second, will be a procession of saints in white (y), with golden harps, accompanied with shouts of joy and songs of praise (z).

Act third, will be an assemblage of the unregenerate (a). The music will consist chiefly of cries (b), accompanied with weeping, wailing, lamentation and woe (c).

To conclude with an oration by the Son of God. It is written in the 25th of Matth;, from the 34th verse to the end of the chapter; but for the sake of those who seldom read the Scriptures, I shall here transcribe two verses:

"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.' Then shall he say unto them on the left hand, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.'"

After which the curtain will drop. Then! Oh, to tell!

Some raised on high, and others doomed to hell!—Rev. 5: 28, 29;

These praise the Lamb, and sing redeeming love—Rev. 5: 8, 9,—14; 3: 4;

Lodged in his bosom: all his goodness prove,—Luke 16: 22, 33.

While those who trampled under foot his grace,—Luke 9: 14, 27.

Are banished now forever from his face, —Matth. 25: 30—2 Thess. 1: 9.

Divided thus a gulf is fixed between,—Luke 16: 29.

And (everlasting)closes up the scene.—Matth. 25: 46.

"This will I do unto thee, O Israel, and because I will do thus unto thee, prepare to meet thy God;" Amos 4: 12.

REMARKS.

The foregoing came to my observation last winter, and in reading it over several times the thought entered my mind that it might accomplish some good in this country, as well as in England. If its publication will not put an end to this play some theatre-going Christians may read it and consider the solemn truths described in the same. We feel confident that no Christian can, after reading this, go to such places of sinful amusements without a remorse of conscience. We think it is time that something should be said or written on this subject, when elders of some of our so-called Christian churches will frequent such places during the week, and then, on the Sabbath day, enter the house of God and conduct divine worship. Is it possible that we can frequent such places of amusement and blasphemy during the week and still be the true and humble followers of the meek and lowly lamb of God? I must confess that I can find no instance of our Saviour ever attending such places of resort and amusement, nor of any of the Apostles. Would it not be more commendable for the Christian to do as Paul did: reason of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, until theatre-going Christians tremble? For "We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, and give account of ourselves to God."

The Lord at the Door.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."—Rev. iii: 20.

Can any man consider these words, and not feel that he is dealing with a personal Savior, or rather that a personal Savior is dealing with him? "There standeth One among you whom ye know not." There is One knocking at your heart's door, and that one is Jesus.

But consider well how and in what respect He comes. It is not here as in the "Song of Solomon," where he stands lowly and weary at the closed door, his "head filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night." Such is the guise in which He is represented in a well known and exquisitely suggestive work of art; but such was not the vision of the apostle, nor the form in which He knocked at the door of Laodicea's lukewarm heart. Read the description in Rev. 3: 15—16, to see how the Lord appears when, for reproof, correction, comfort and chastening, He "walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks."

He who stands at the door is the Lord! "Behold I stand!" We may behold Him if we will look; we may hear Him if we will listen or not, we shall see him one day, for the time will come "when every eye shall see him, and they also who pierced him,"—pierced Him by refusing his calls of grace.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation," neither does the knocking at the door come with observation, though the King is there! It is for us to beware how we trifle with that sound; to beware lest we suffer the world's noises to fill our ear so as to overpower it; to beware how we mistake other voices for his call; to beware how we delay to open, and, in the cases of those around us for whom we are interested, it is for us to trust them prayerfully and hopefully with the Savior, believing that at their door, too, He will knock, whether we hear it or not, and anxious chiefly lest we should in any way prove a stumbling-block in their path.

The Two Workers.

Two workers in one field
Toiled on from day to day,
Both had the same hard labor,
Both had the same small pay;
With the same blue sky above,
The same green grass below,
One soul was full of love,
The other full of woe.

One leaped up with the light,
With the soaring of the lark,
One felt it ever night,
For his soul was ever dark
One heart was hard as stone,
One heart was ever gay;
One worked with many a groan,
One whistled all the day.

One had a flower-clad cot,
Beside a merry mill,
Wife and children near the spot
Made it sweeter, fairer still;
One a wretched hovel had,
Full of discord, dirt and din,
No wonder he seemed mad,
Wife and children starved within.

Still they worked in the same field,
Toiled on from day to day,
Both had the same hard labor,
Both had the same small pay:
But they worked not with one will:
The reason let me tell—
Lo! the one drank at the still,
And the other at the well.

For the COMPANION.

Faith.

Sitting all alone in our destitute Chamber, we feel impressed with the idea of writing a few lines, and can think of no subject of more vital imporance than the one heading this article; not that we think our productions are of any utility, but peradventure they may influence some unbiased minds from the broad to the narrow way.

We are taught in God's word, that "without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

First we would ask, what is faith? In reply we would say, it is giving credit to a declaration.

And now dear reader, to illustrate the assesrtion; suppose you were traveling through a strange land, a country in which you were not acquainted, and you were to arrive at a point where two roads meet, and you did not know which of the two to take; and while you are thus pondering in your mind which of the two to take, there comes a man who is thoroughly acquainted with the country and roads, and he tells you to take the right-hand road. Now if you credit his declaration, you take him at his word. But by what means will you manifest your faith in him? You will act accordingly, will take the right-hand road, and thus, by your action or works, do you prove clearly the credit you give to his declaration. So it is with the Christian religion. We are taught repentance toward God, and faith in Jesus Christ.

Now friendly reader, we are travelers through a strange land while tabernacling here in the flesh, and all who have come to the years of accountability, those who can discover both good and evil, have arrived at the point where the two roads meet. Suffice it to say, that there is one who has discovered the way to the Celestial City. One who has pointed out the way, both by precept and example. The Savior is the one who has told us which of the two to take. He says, "Enter ye in at the straight gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Now if you credit his dcelaration, you will act accordingly, you will enter in at the straight gate by his prescriptions; you will follow his steps in the pathway of righteousness. And thus it is that your works are the evidence of your faith in Christ.

To more fully comprehend the matter, permit us here to present another illustration. Go with me, if you please, into the vineyard, and see the vine, which, for convenience, we will call the Concord. You see by its appearance that it is a vine, and looks thrifty, sound and perfect, with all the vitality of life; but you do not know that it is the Concord. But by continual observance you will discover that it swells and shoots forth its buds, being watered by the gentle spring showers from heaven; at last it manifests its fruit in the most tender form. It is still watered from heaven by the dewdrops of May, and the brilliant beams of the material sun casting forth his glittering rays of light upon it, until at last, it has become fully ripe. And now you see and taste the fruit, and the fruit which the vine produces, is the evidence that I have told you the truth.

Even so it is with faith and works. Faith may be represented by the vine, and works by the fruit; for works without faith are no works, and faith without works is no faith, hence, we claim that faith and works are co-existant. Works are the fruit which faith produces. But what kind of works does faith produce? Go with me, if you please, a little further in the vineyard, by way of illustration. See the vine hanging luxuriently with the delicious clusters from top to bottom. The lower cluster, near the ground, is known by the name of humility. Oh, how delightful it looks! Even so with the cluster of humility in the Christian's heart. Yea, we claim that it will humble down to wash his brethren's feet.

We look a little higher up the vine, and see another cluster we call, Meekness. O how delightful it looks! No spirit of resentment there, but taking patiently, all the troubles and conflicts of earth. Do we not see the lesson taught us in the Savior's sermon on the mount? "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil."

A little further up the vine we see another cluster, most beautiful indeed to behold, and that cluster we will call love. Love your enemies. Oh Christian! Does our vine or faith produce this cluster? If not we are not in the falt, for the vine or faith will produce those delicious clusters. "Love the brotherhood." "Let brotherly love continue." Brethren, are we not all a little too apt to let that beautiful cluster fail? Do we let it continue? Do we not sometimes think that a brother or sister has wronged us, and we fail to continue? Oh brethren and sisters, it is too often the case that we hinder the continuance of the clustur of love, by not applying the proper cultivation of God's word to the vine.

And on the top of the vine we see another cluster possessed of a golden hue, and apparently more beautiful than earth can afford. Yea, it causes the heart to glow with emotions unspeakable and full of joy. That cluster we will call Hope; for the apostle says "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." Yes, the Christian stands upon the beach, and views through the telescope of the Gospel, on the other side of the dark river of death, the beautiful climes of eternal felicity; yea, the magnificent mansions prepared by the Lord of Glory, "A house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

"We are taught by the apostle, that faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen; for by it the elders obtained a good report." Do we not see the evidence of the faith of the elders as given in the cataloge by the apostle, how that their faith produced obedience to God's word, and by which they obtained a good report? "By faith, Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." My dear and friendly reader, both saint and sinner, it occurs irrevocably to my mind that faith will produce obedience to God's word, let that word be what it may.

Permit us in our great weakness to use another illustration. We are taught by the apostle Peter, that God, "According to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again into a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." We see in the above quotation an inheritance in reservation for the people of God. Suppose there was a wealthy parent whose residence was in a foreign land, and his possessions were great, he possessed the entire country where he resided, and that country was very fertile and productive; while you, dear reader, were living in a barren desert where you are doomed to perish if you remain. But the father sees your deplorable condition and sends the foster son with the good news and glad tidings, that if you will accept the offer, he will give a farm without money and without price, upon the condition that you must resurvey the farm by the field-notes or map that the son leaves you. How diligently would you search the map, and with all the scrutinizing principles of mathematics would you make your calculation from your azamith tables upon the elongation of the pole star that you might get properly around the survey. Now when your calculation is made, you enter upon the survey, and set your compass at the beginning corner, and turn with great precision until you get it with the map, and then look through your sites, and get an object at some distance ahead, placing your eye dilgently upon the object, and holding it there until you come thither. O how careful would you search the map to see if you were in the right direction and at the proper station! Yes, with great care and precision would you occasionally search the map, and at each station would you turn the compass precisely with the tangent bearings of the map, that you might properly close up the survey. Now you have peace and plenty. All is yours.

So with the sinner, he is living in the barren deserts of disobedience, walking on the scorching sands of Satan, tilling the unproductive soil of the devil, and must ultimately perish, unless he takes up with the offered mercies of God; for God the eternal Father has pitied our condition, and sent forth his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemned sin in the flesh; and promises an inheritance which is incompatible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

The Savior has come with the good news and glad tidings, and left us the map which directs us to resurvey his footsteps. The mind or will, may be represented as the compass with the direction of the map, your survey is of no utility.

Even so with the map that Christ has left us. We claim that unless we turn our mind our will with the direction of the map our gospel of Christ, we cannot resurvey his steps, and when we find that we are not willing to stoop to the least behest of heaven, we are then off the tangent bearings and cannot close the survey. Oh, what a pity! The inheritance lost, forever lost!

Thus do we understand dear reader, that faith produces obedience to all the mandates of high heaven, though some of them may seem as though they were of no utility in the eyes of humanity. But let me assure you that they are highly authorized. We have the authority from heaven and not of man. We have the authority for the observance of those little things, which are regarded by many as of minor importance. From him who is Lord of lords and King of kings. Bless his excellent name. He hath chosen simplicity to confound wisdom.

Be encouraged brethren and sisters in Christ: "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering;" and when life and its troubles are over, when all the conflicts of earth have passed, then shall we obtain that "inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."

ANDREW STALNAKER.

For the COMPANION.

We Shall Know Each Other in Glory.

There has been considerable written on the above subject; but as we differ in opinion, and the subject is one of importance, I feel like giving a few ideas to the readers of the COMPANION.

We believe we shall know each other in heaven; for we know each other in the present world. All human beings have certain distinctive marks by which they are known. And will our knowledge be lost in the world to come? Will our knowledge of each other be less perfect in a world of perfection, than it is in this imperfect state? It cannot be ascertained how we may be known to each other there; but if we examine the subject on the principles of analogy, we cannot doubt the fact. There is a high probability that we shall then know all whom we have known before, by some resemblance of their former appearance, which they may still retain. There is a general likeness in the countenances of men, accompanied with such amazing variety, that there never were two faces exactly alike since the world was made. But when any one is well known by his friends and acquaintances, it is not an easy matter to forget him. He is remembered when absent, and is not forgotten after he has been removed by death. And why may we not suppose that the spirits of men, when they are seen by spirits, will be recognized by some identical appearance. Will the peculiarities of their respective forms be so far changed, that they cannot be known to those who knew them in the body and conversed with them in the flesh? It has been supposed by physiognomists, that every feature of man arises from some peculiar property in his soul; and if this be true, the property will appear conspicuously after he has laid aside his body, and, after his resurrection, he will still retain that peculiarity, in external appearance, which he had on earth. If this reasoning be correct, we shall most assurdly know each other both before and after the resurrection of the dead.

Is it possible to lose a recollection of our dearest friends in a world of perfection? This involves a contradiction, and he who attempts to prove it, must affirm that we know our friends in a state of comparative ignorance, but that we shall be forever unknown to each other when we are perfected in knowledge. Recollections of persons and things, in ages that have passed away, will be one source of eternal blessedness; and to be deprived of this, would cut off that stream of pleasure which will be enjoyed in the happy junction of all the wise and good of every age and nation.

But if we shall be wholly unacquainted with those pious persons who have lived on earth, our knowledge will be limited within a very narrow circle, and their society will not afford us that pleasure which we now anticipate. It has always been considered, that a knowledge of men and things is a high attainment; and shall we be ignorant either of be one or the other when we live in a world of light and glory? Will all be strangers and unknown to each other in the heavenly society? The idea is, in my opinion, absurd, and should be banished from the mind of every man.

The question, how we shall know each other, is unnecessary, and cannot be solved; but if we possess this knowledge in the present world, surely it will be continued in a higher state. Lazarus was known in heaven. The angels that carried him to the bosom of Abraham knew him well. They had seen him in abject poverty, covered with sores and shamefully neglected. They saw him in the hour of death, and they saw him in glory; and if he was known to them when advanced to the heavenly feast and clothed with honor, was he not known to others? Abraham knew him, mentioned his former name, and stated his sufferings on earth; Luke 16: 25. He was greatly changed, but still appeared as the identical person who lay at the gate of the rich man; and it is highly probable that a vast concourse of celestial spirits, who witnessed his arrival, knew who he was and what he had suffered. If this be allowed, it proves a great deal; for, if one knew him, why not others also, when they saw him lodged in Abraham's bosom? But the rich man, though in hell, knew both Abraham and Lazarus, for it is especially said, he seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom; Verse 23. This is a deep mystery, but nevertheless a fact. Abraham knew that the rich man was one of his descendants, was well acquainted with his history, and called him his son; hence he said, "Son, remember, that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things, but now he is comforted and thou are tormented;" Verse 25. How wonderful are those worlds to which we are going! In this account, whether it be considered as a parable or a historical fact our blessed Lord conveys an idea that departed spirits are known to each other after this life, though separated by an impassible gulf. It does not weaken the force of the argument to consider this portion of Scripture merely as a parable; for all parables are founded on facts, and this proves the fact for which we contend and no one can entertain a doubt on this subject, who gives an entire credit to Jesus as a divine teacher.

Difficulties may meet the eye of an anxious inquirer after truth, but he bows down to the high authority of an infallible record. We cannot explain profound mysteries, but we believe what God has condescended to reveal in his holy word. Pastors will know their flocks in heaven, and the flocks will their pastors. This fact is stated by the apostle Paul, in words that cannot be denied by any impartial reader. Thus he informed the Thesselonian believers of his hope and joy in meeting them at the coming of Jesus "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy;" 1 Thess. 2: 19, 20. But if ministers cannot know their flocks when Jesus comes, how can they joy in them at his appearance? or how can they be a crown of rejoicing, if they are totally unknown to their pious and holy instructors?

We shall be presented to God in a state of perfection, by those ministers who have warned us, and taught us in all wisdom, hence they make this appeal to their converts—"Christ in you the hope of glory, whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Jesus Christ;" Col 1: 28. And will they not know those whom they present to their God and Savior? The steady perseverance of saints inspires a minister with confidence; because he will meet them with joy at this coming of Jesus: "And now, little children, abide in him, that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming;" 1 John 2: 28. And can this be realized, if they do not know their flocks? But if pastors know their flocks, will not the flocks know their pastors? And will not their joy be mutual, when they meet in the heavenly fold? Will they not recollect all those refreshing seasons which they enjoyed together in the green pastures of divine ordinance, while they were on earth? But all this implies a recollection of persons and things in the present world, when we are with Jesus in a state of immortal joy and felicity. With what unknown pleasure shall we behold those teachers who cared for our souls, and who showed us the way of salvation! But all the praise and all the glory will be given to God and the Lamb.

Intemperance.

Our nation is stained with many vices, but none more ruinous than intemperance. Of all the vicious habits in which men indulge, are there any which cause more misery than intemperance? So easy is its course, that, before you are aware, you are within the limits of this great mælstrom, which never stays its mighty force, until its hapless victim is whirled far down to the lowest depths of misery and woe. It is as deceitful as the smiles of the ocean; under whose bright surface lies many a lifeless form.

Man, art thou a son of intemperance? Let reason act, while I try to converse silently with thee. I am aiming at thy best interest; and if the god of wine thinks I cannot make him tremble, I can, at least, tell him that I highly oppose him, and dare say I hate him.

Man, the image of God, an intelligent being, created for the purpose of giving honor unto his Maker, whose body should be "the temple of the Holy Ghost;" man, who is the noblest specimen of the Almighty's skill, who is gifted with an immortal soul, was hardly called into existence merely to kiss the poisonous dew from the "social glass," and thereby abuse all that is noble, moral, and godlike in him. Is it not worse than burying the talent until the "hard master" comes? Why, the one given you is not only hidden, but destroyed! so, are you not guilty of a rather daring act against a divine command?

Ah! youth, do not even trust to gaze through the transparent cup, as the blushing crystals fall musically into its tiny well, tinkling until one thinks it is saying something intelligible. Well, who knows? it might be trying to say, "Beware! Poison!!" But let it say what it may, its warning goes by unheeded; the fatal glass goes, and it returns empty, and then the gate of intemperance is unlocked.

Alas, man, thou art giving thy reason to the agent of hell, and he will destroy it for thee! He will not only steal away thy brain, not only break the golden vase of genius and love, but even hurl thy soul from the lofty platform, where the Giver has placed it, into the abyss of woe, and cause thy bosom to rankle with indescribable remorse. And to run thus into the arms of such a hideous monster as is King Alcohol, for the sake of a few hours of low sensual pleasure, is indeed the heighth of human folly.

Oh, it does represent a gloomy picture to the human eye! When we compare time with eternity, what are even the severest trials here, compared with the loss of heaven, and an eternity of bliss? and what are all, compared with the destruction of an immortal spirit, whose Creator's design was, that it should live for life and glory. But we are free to choose, and alas, how many choose wrong!

There, in his cell, lie the pale remains of him who was once called honorable, but in an evil hour he fell. Hush! I dare not tell anymore, I'll let the curtain fall! Come away; for his wife is coming. I'll not mortify her already aching heart. She has been humbled enough. But ah! the veil is too thin to screen from our eyes the picture, whose sight appalls us—an imaginary scene even falls like lead upon our hearts, as we think what a life of misery there must be in the darkened "home circle." The weary wife's lonely vigil, as she sits in the dark, cold chamber, (that should be made sunny with the angel of Love) waiting and straining her tearful eyes through the paneless window, to catch a glimpse of the uneven shadow of her faithless one. But no sign of his coming. She turns away, goes into a corner where lies her innocent child, draws the old, faded garment closer around him, gazes upon his lovely features, until she seems to forget the great trial of her life. Memory is busily unraveling the past, recalling childhood's hour, a mother's smile, a father's love, and then the vision of him whom she loves, rises in view. She loves him, cares for him; she passes on its mighty sway, and turns to be his dutiful, loving wife. Oh! happy days of old, will you never more return? A sound dispels the charm of her musings, as her fears are confirmed in the giddy step, the stony eye, and an idiotic murmur greets her ear. She sees the bottle of rum protruding from his pocket; and he, instead of greeting her with a smile, and making himself agreeable with her whom he once called his queen, looks at her, and with a frown on her brow, and a curse on his lips, takes, in her presence, a large draught from the shameless bottle.

But as my sensitive feelings would not permit me to gaze on such a spectacle any longer, and as the room was soon filled with an odor that made one's nerves ache, I turned to go, but glanced once more at his suffering wife, whose hands were tightly clasped over her heavy heart, as though to lighten its burden, while her eyes were turned upward, and her lips moved, and I heard her utter such a groan, as though her spirit tried to free itself from such a life. I went away sad, meditating upon what I had seen. I shed tears of pity for this wretched man, and breathed a heartfelt prayer that the Father of mercy would reach forth his mighty arm in order to save this poor man, whose perishing soul is well nigh drowned in the great gulf of intemperance, and that he might sustain the wife of such a man, who is called to pass under the merciless waves of affliction; and yet add, that he may spare us the misery of the fiery ordeal which this poor woman was called to realize.

Christian, this is a dark picture; yet I might have turned to a page of a still more gloomy one. I'll not mention the gloom that overhangs the dying hour, which will follow such a sad life. My heart aches heavy enough. But to whom shall I appeal, to arrest this tide of intemperance? When will men know that "It is not all of life to live,

Nor all of death to die?"

When will reason tear the veil of the awful future from his gaze, that he may see the precipice upon which he stands, and recede from its giddy height ere he be precipitated to its fearful chasm below? Oh, thousand homes, unhappy! How many tears have been shed, and prayers said in thy cause, thou foul stain of America? Freedom's land? and yet a slave to the great passion—Intemperance!

AMANDA MUSSELMAN.

"Behold, Now is the Accepted Time."

Dear reader, I now address you who are yet outside of the ark of safety, and have made no effort for your soul's salvation.

Pause a moment, and consider, that the present time—the present day—is the only season that you are sure of. Time past can never be recalled, and time to come cannot be ascertained. Perhaps you have health and strength and are surrounded by kind and loving friends; you may think, I am young and strong and have all the happiness I desire, what more do I want? But you know not how soon the cold and icy hand of death will be laid upon you, and if unprepared you will be shut out from Christ, and his glory forever! Methinks I can see you gathering around the death bed of a dear and loved one, whose soul was filled with glory, waiting to be wafted to the other shore. Your hearts are stirred to the very depths with penitence and sorrow, and as the dying farewell was pressed upon your lips, and your hand was clasped for the last time upon earth, you promised you too would serve the Lord. The grave closed over them, and, alas! you quenched the Spirit, and thought you would wait for a better opportunity, and a better time. Dear friends delay no longer. Time is precious. Let the world say what it will; there is no pleasure to be found in the follies and vanities of the world, it all passeth away as the flower of the field. Follow after Jesus Christ, and you will find joy and happiness, that the world cannot give, neither take from you, it endureth forever! "Harden not your hearts. Behold, now is the accepted time and now is the day of salvation"! Jesus loves you,

"He is waiting—will you leave him
Pleading at your heart in vain?
He is willing—oh, believe him?
He may never call again.

Come, oh come, this day and try it!
Jesus' words are proved and true;
Take his gift, you cannot buy it—
He hath waited long for you."

It is a secret known but to few, yet of no small use in the conduct of life that when you fall into a man's conversation, the first thing you should consider is, whether he has a greater inclination to hear you, or that you should hear him.—Steele.

Persia.

THE COUNTRY.

Persia and Assyria in Easten Turkey,the country occupied by the Nestorians,constitute one of the most interesting mission fields in the world. It is the original cradle of the human race. If it does not include the site of Eden, it certainly embraces the resting place of the ark of Noah, and it still has representatives of the descendants of Shem,Ham,and Japheth in the various nationalities now found in the country. It is the land of Abraham and of Job and of Jonah. The ashes of Mordecai and Esther lie buried at Hamadan. It was in this land that Daniel became instrumental in one of the greatest moral revolutions ever wrought in any nation by a single man. Great empires and advanced civilizations have arisen and passed away on this broad field. Nineveh and Khorsabad are representatives of their buried grandeur, while thousands of ancient inscriptions found on rocks and tablets constitute their epitaph. The country has been rendered memorable by many of the great conquests which have affected the destiny of the whole human race, and it has been invested with pathetic interest by mournful captivities of Jews and others in various ages. Even in our day the Nestorians, living between Persians and Turkish Koords, between Sunnite and Shihite sects of Moslems—victims of rapacity and persecution on every hand—seem to represent the traditional lot of suffering and outrage which for centuries have characterized the country. And yet there is nowhere a more beautiful land. "Only man is vile." Barrenness now exists, but irrigation, protected by good government, might yet restore that fruitfulness which in other ages sustained the dense population of mighty empires.

"About two-thirds of the country," says the late Justin Perkins, D. D., "the western portion, lie in Turkey, comprising much of Assyria, or modern Koordistan; and the eastern third is in old Media,the north-western portion of modern Persia, now called Azerbijan. The former portion is physically one of the wildest and roughest regions of the globe, abounding in scenery of surpassing grandeur and sublimity, and is inhabited by not less wild Koords, among whom, and in proximity to whom, many of the Nestorians dwell, till lately subject to lawless extortion and violent plunder from those redoubtable neighbors. The Nestorians betook themselves to those mountains at an early period as an asylum from deadly persecution, having less to fear in the violent outbursts of Pagan and Mohammedan fanaticism, from the savages of the mountains, than from the more civilized inhabitants of the plains on either side. In the lull of persecution during the last few centuries, they have gradually spread themselves down into Persia.

"The Persian part of their country is one of the most beautiful on which the sun ever shone, consisting of several of the most charming Persian plains; bounded on the east by the lake of Oroomiah, which is ninety miles long and thirty miles broad, while the towering ranges of Koordistan rear a lofty snow-capped barrier on rhe west. Oroomiah, lying on the middle section of the lake, and separated from other plains by bold ridges that run transversely from the higher mountain ranges quite to its margin, is the largest district occupied by the Nestorians, and is the principal seat of missionary operations. The atmosphere of all that region is so clear that the naked eye with ease traces objects distinctly at the distance of a hundred miles, which would hardly be visible one-fourth that distance in America, and readily descrys celestial objects, seen elsewhere only by the aid of a telescope. Indeed, much of Persia, under its brilliant sky, is so fair as to be almost fairy; abounding in luxurious fields, vineyards and orchards, and smiling with tasteful gardens of bright and fragrant flowers, studded with gurgling fountains and shady arbors, and vocal with the notes of warbling nightingales and other musical birds."

THE PEOPLE.

The Nestorians derive their name from Nestorius, who was condemned for heresy by the Council of Ephesus, A. D. 431, and who died in painful exile in Lybia. Though holding some peculiar views in regard to the Trinity, the real offense of which he was guilty was his early Protestanism. He refused to call the Virgin Mary the "Mother of God," and he opposed many of the corruptions of the Church. His followers, though greatly debased, still reject all image worship, confession to priests, doctrine of purgatory, etc.

Altogether the Nestorians number about one hundred and fifty thousand, one-third are in Persia and two-thirds are in Turkish Koordistan. They stand in the relation of oppressed tenants toward the Mohammedans, among whom they dwell, being cultivators of the soil and artisans in the more common and useful mechanical trades. One continuous people, while living in the contiguous empires of Turkey and Persia, they partake much of the respective local peculiarities of the two parts of their country; those in the Turkish portion, Koordistan, being rude, untutored, bold and defiant, and those in the mild and sunny climate of Persia possessing much of the blandness and suavity common to all classes in that genial country. They are a noble race of men, manly and athletic, having fine forms and good complexions. They are also naturally a shrewd, active and intelligent people, yet remarkably artless, affable and hospitable, and peculiarly accessible for missionary purposes.

ONCE A MISSIONARY CHURCH.

That which gives to the Nestorians a peculiar interest is the missionary character which they have once borne, and which, it is to be hoped, they may bear again. The Oriental Churches, as a whole, were not as active in the spread of the gospel as the Latin Church; but the Nestorians were an exception. "In the east," says Mosheim, "the Nestorians, with incredible industry and perseverance, labored to propagate the gospel from Persia, Syria and India, among the barbarous nations inhabiting the desert and remotest shores of Asia. In particular, the vast empire of China was partially enlightened by their zeal and industry with the light of Christianity." From the fifth to the ninth century the Nestorians had churches among the mountains of Malabar, in India, and in the vast regions of Tartary, from the Caspian Sea to Mount Imaus, beyond through Chinese Tartary, and even in China itself. Early in the eleventh century a Mogul prince in Cathay (Northern China) was converted to the faith, and taking, at his baptism, the name of John, gave his royal influence to the Christian cause.

Some of his successors also were at least nominally Christian. A son-in-law of Prestor John—the well-known Ghengis Khan—gave his support to the Christians as late as the early part of the thirteenth century. But toward the close of the fourteenth century the sword of Moslem Tamerlane destroyed the Tartar churches and overthrew the Nestorian Christianity in the principal seat of power. It was not until the close of the fifteenth century, however, that some unknown persecution and massacre destroyed the Nestorians in China. There is still found at Sianganfu, in North-western China, a large stone tablet giving an account of the faith and history of the Nestorians. It presents their doctrine of the Trinity and some accounts of the books of the Old and New Testaments, and records their progress for one hundred and forty years.

For the degradation and real moral darkness of these people for the last three centuries there would seem to be some reason. They have been crushed by invasion and slaughter and constant tyranny, and at the same time have been subjected to the immediate contact of all the sensuality and debasement of the dominant Moslem races. But how significant is the history of the Nestorians of Persia as bearing upon the question of their future relations to Tartary and even China. Why may they not again be useful in carrying the gospel even to Mongolia and the Corea? They have physical energy and hardihood, though ground to the very dust by bad government and every species of wrong. They are capable of a high civilization, and their susceptibility to the power of religious truth has had numerous attestations in modern as well as in ancient times.

It is this view of their character and position that gives to the mission among the Persians a peculiar interest. They are at the western gateway of China and India. They are stationed along a great highway of nations, which must, ere long, be opened. They are, moreover, in the center of Asiatic Mohammedanism, where they only wait in sore distress for some overturning in the providence of God which shall give them governmental protection and the conditions of prosperity. Meanwhile it is the duty and privilege of the Christian Church to promote among them the resurrection of a dead and buried Christianity.

WHY THE TERRIBLE FAMINE?

Famine now wastes the land—especially the Moslem Districts—and its havoc must ever recur at intervals until there shall be such a government as shall protect and encourage irrigation instead of speculating in breadstuffs while the people perish. The immediate cause of the present suffering is found in the successive droughts of the last two or three years. But the real and fundamental causes are founded in the wretched administrations of public affairs. The Government is an absolute despotism, in the hands of a Sultan or Shah. He has two chief ministers—one a sort of deputy executive in peace or war and the other a lord high treasurer. The evil lies in the fact that the latter of these is so much more than the former. There is vastly more of tax-gatheing than of civil or military protection. The sole end for which the Persian Government exists is the collection of the revenue—the fleecing of the people. Large portions of the land, confiscated from time to time, belong to the sovereign, and are farmed out on terms well-nigh ruinous to the subject. Even where property belongs to the subject it is taxed to the last degree as a starting point, while the successions of sub-rulers and collectors make still further drains upon the moiety that must save the laborer's family from absolute want. The whole burden of taxation thus comes really upon the laboring class. Added to this extortion is the constant uncertainty as to whether the planter will be permitted to reap his crop at all. Downright robbery of fields or households, by the retainers of petty chiefs, is of frequent occurrence, and the poor are liable any day to be deprived of their very last resource. Agriculture and other industries, so discouraged and paralized, barely sustain the lives of the people, when at the best, and when, as now, drought is added, thousands must perish from want.

"Still worse," says J. S. Shedd, "there is no Joseph in Persia to make any systematic provison against such a crisis. There is no public channel of supply. On the contrary, the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. The king sets the example—locks up his granaries and withholds every kernel of wheat, except at famine prices. Every nabob and land-owner, who has a stock on hand, follows this example. Rapacity and cupidity rule. Money is coined out of the sufferings of the poor. The imbecility, avarice and cruelty of the ruling class are sometimes beyond belief. Depravity is satanic. Persia is ruined by despotism, misrule and feudal oppression. No lover of humanity can regard such a land but with feelings of profound pity. We long for the day when civilization will build highways and railroads by which charity at least can be conveyed to the famishing. A proper system of roads and one or two railroads in Persia would make such a famine impossible. The country has natural resources, which only need developing to make her, as in ancient times, a great nation. Places supplied with water yield every kind of fruit and grain in abundance. These beautiful, favored districts can be extended. By opening again the ancient water-courses, by sinking artesian wells, by proper aqueducts for the mountain streams, irrigation can be greatly extended and the rain supply increased. But before this physical renovation comes, and war and famine cease, there must be a moral renovation. At present the earth itself, under a despotic government and false religion, is cursed for man's sake. It refuses to yield its harvest for the use of man, because man refuses to yield himself to the glory of God.

Jews in Palestine.

The latest census of Palestine shows a total Jewish population of 15,200 souls. Of these, 8,000 (more than half) live in Jerusalem, about 4,000 in Safet, 2,500 in Tiberias, and 500 in Hebron. The remainder, about 400, are divided between Acco, Jaffa, Haifa, Sichem, and Shefa-Amar. In Jerusalem are fourteen congregations; the largest is the Sephardic, consisting of 3,600, from Spain; the congregation of the Mogrebim (Morocco and Tunis) has 1,000 members. The Russian Jews have nine separate congregations, of which the Wohlynians is the largest (492 members), and the Sewaks the smallest (160). Austria, Hungary, Holland, and Germany have three congregations, the first two, 250 each; the latter two, one congregation of seventy-four members.

DALE CITY, PA., Oct. 22, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

Lodged at brother Joseph R. Hanawalt's, the Elder of this Spring Run congregation.

MONDAY, 14th. Preached at the same place, in the forenoon, with good attention, which would be expected, being principally members of the Church.

After dinner brother Abraham Myers brought us to his house, where we were well entertained until train time. Brother Myers bestowed a father's kindness upon us, while in their vicinity, and we fear if we should call that way again, he may have more trouble with us.

About five o'clock took the train for Lewistown. Brother Andrew Spanogle, Jun., met us at the station, and conducted us to his home near at hand. How things will change, When we worked for this family. years ago, their children were all small, now they have several grown up daughters. Spent a pleasant night in the family.

TUESDAY, 16th. The forenoon was occupied in writing public and private correspondence. After dinner brother Spanogle took us to Dry Valley meeting-house where a communion meeting was appointed. The services commenced at 2 o'clock. The congregation was rather small but very attentive. At the night session there was a better attendance. Had a good meeting. About the same ministering brethren were present, with the addition of some of the Spring Run brethren. The brethren believing it necessary, three of their ministers, namely John Price, Geo. S. Myers, and Samuel J. Swigart were advanced to the second degree.

Lodged at brother Wm. How's, which was the first time we were ever with this interesting family, but from choice it will not be the last time.

WEDNESDAY, 16th. Our arrangements required us to leave shortly before ten o'clock, so we could only remain with the brethren until their meeting had been opened, and brother John L. Beaver had cleverly commenced his sermon Then brother How took us to the train, and we were soon on our way, and arrived at Mifflin shortly before twelve. Sister Spanogle, and sister Van Dyke now belonged to our company. Brother John Zook met us at the station, and brother Daniel Seiber in the town of Mifflin, and took us to the Free Spring meeting-house, where the love-feast was appointed, to commence at one o'clock. Had a good afternoon meeting, and a fair attendance. Elders Isaac Myers of the Buffalo Valley branch, Samuel Grayhill, Lancaster county, and brother Benjamin Eby, of the latter place, with a few other ministers from adjoining branches were present. Had a large attendance in the evening, and an enjoyable meeting. Lodged at brother Andrew Bashore's, one of the ministers of this branch, where we had stopped six or seven years ago.

THURSDAY, 17th, There was preaching again in the forenoon, at the meeting-house, with a fair attendance. This was the last meeting for this trip, and we began to feel an anxious desire to turn our faces homeward. But the brief notice of the condition of our worthy brother C. H. Balsbaugh, also awakened a desire to see him once more in this life, and thinking we would never enjoy a more favorable opportunity to visit him we concluded to take a day for that purpose. Brother Andrew Basoar, and brother Andrew Kurtz each sent a conveyance, to take our company to Mifflintown. Wife and Lottie went home with brother C. Shellenberger's, until we would return. Having a little spare time at the station, we were invited to the house of friend Ephraim Lauver, for supper, where we also enjoyed the society of the family, and a comfortable waiting place.

At about six P. M. we took the train eastward. A few stations below Mifflin, brother S. R. Zug again joined us, and we had a pleasant ride to Harrisburg, where we landed at about seven. Brother Zug went on homeward, and I was obliged to remain over night. We felt sad to part with our true "Yoke Fellow," with whom we had been laboring for about ten days. Hope the Lord will prosper him on his homeward journey, and his whole life mission.

Betook us to the Farmer's Hotel where we had a hard bed, and poor rest, being disturbed all night by other guests.

FRIDAY, 18th. Took the train, on the Lebanon Valley R. R., at five, A. M., to Hummellstown, from whence we walked to brother J. H. Balsbaugh's near Swatara station, as the early train did not stop there. Here we were kindly received, although we thought we would be an entire stranger; but the sister had seen us at the Annual Meeting. From this place, old brother Abraham Balsbaugh, living with his son, took us, in his buggy, by way of Union Deposit, to the home of our brother C. H. B. Arrived at about eleven A. M. When we entered his room we expected to take him very much by surprise, but a young woman living in the family, had already borne the tidings that brother Holsinger had passed the house in a buggy. So he was prepared for us, and we received a hearty salutation. And our heart was made to beat with joy to find him in a condition to admit of at least some interchange of sentiment, never before having enjoyed his company except once for two or three minutes, at the Annual Meeting, at Antietam, in 1866.

And now having gained access to his bed-side, we presume our readers wish to know all about our dear brother, as we know, from the numerous inquiries of our correspondents, as well as those of our brethren and sisters, whom we meet on our visits, that thousands of our readers feel a deep concern in his welfare, having greatly endeared himself to our appreciative patrons by his able contributions to our columns.

Physically he is not as much reduced as our readers may suppose from his long continued affliction. He is able to walk across the room from his bed to the library, with a quick step. His principal of affliction being disease of the throat, has destroyed his voice, so that he cannot speak above a whisper, but did not necessarily reduce his strength, as a pulmonary disease would have done. But a long continued combination of diseases, has badly disarranged his general system, and especially his nervous system, producing what he calls Nervous Dysentery. He enjoys a reasonable appetite; but on account of his intense mental powers, and the lack of physical organism to feed so active a brain, he does not enjoy the requisite amount of sleep and rest to enable him to preserve his former equilibrium of mind, and is therefore subject to seasons of despondency. From these he is, however, occasionally aroused, after a season of mental repose, to look upon the realities of life, when he becomes enthusiastic for the advancement of the Master's cause; but unfortunately is soon carried out into the world of thought, and lost in some favorite theme. He is undoubtedly the most intense thinker we have ever met. And we do believe that if he could obtain mental ease and quietude, our brother could again be restored to his usual health. His own view of the case is, that the Lord only can restore him; and it is his desire to be restored, if not to working health, at least to such a degree as to make life more tolerable. He therefore desires the prayers of all God's people. And we earnestly entreat all our dear brethren and sisters to send up their sincere prayers in behalf of our brother Balsbaugh, that the Lord may heal him.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1873

The Brethren's Almanac for next year, is now nearly ready, and our books are open for orders, by the single copy, dozen or hundred. And our rule is first come first served.

The present will be equal to any previous issue, in its reading matter. And the list of ministers names will be largely increased. We believe there will be few ministers whose names will not be found on our list.

There will also be several new biographies, and items of history, &c.

Price ten cents a single copy: seventy-five cents a dozen, all post paid. These rates are for cash accompanying the order.

Send in orders immediately.

We would be pleased to continue our remarks but prudence would seem to forbid for the present. After a few hours of mingled pleasure and pain, we took our leave of our dear brother; and never have we felt more sad at bidding farewell to a living person, for it is very probable that in this world we shall not meet again: but "When the dreams of life are fled,

When its wasted lamps are dead,
When in cold oblivion's shade,
Beauty wealth and fame are laid—
Where immortal spirits reign,
There indeed we'll meet again."

The old brother again returned us to his son's, where we took supper, and awaited the evening train, and received much kindness. Brother John accompanied us to the train, and we had an opportunity of exchanging sentiments upon various subjects. We find him a strong advocate of a school among us, with a preference to having it located in some healthy locality in Pennsylvania. Of this more again.

Number Forty-two.

By an oversight the figures indicating the number of our paper was not changed from 41 to 42, and the result is, that we have two numbers, 41, and no number 42. Please note this mistake, and mark the issue of October 22, number 42. Then all will come right. Otherwise we shall be annoyed with applications for copies of number 42.

Folio or Octavo.

I am opposed to the change of the form of the COMPANION. I consider the octavo much better, for several reasons. I think it is much more convenient. When we have done reading them, we can lay them away until we get the volume, and then we can get them bound, if we want to; if not, we can sew them together ourselves and keep them. But if changed to the folio form they will soon wear out by folding and unfolding. I have asked the opinion of the subscribers and they all, except one, like the present form best. Some say, if it is changed they will quit taking it. I don't like to say, I will not take it if it is changed, for I do not like to do without it; but I cannot get many, perhaps not any, subscribers for you. Brother John Wolf, in the District west of here, gave me leave to say for him, that if you change the form of your paper he could not do anything for you. He is opposed to the change in toto. I feel, as some others have said, like fighting it out on this line if it takes until New Year. Brethren and sisters, help us. Brother Editor give us your reason for changing the C. F. C.

M. J. MARQUIS.

We have given all the reasons we think necessary; it would be much more convenient to both publisher and patrons. But we are not disposed to fight the matter out. If our patrons cannot see it to be to their advantage and convenience to adopt a folio form, we must wait till they can see it; that is all. And, although we would greatly prefer to do it now, we have concluded to make no change for the present. And therefore we now announce that volume nine will be issued in the present form.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. A. SELL: We will try to fill your order for Tune Books as soon as we get another supply.

J. S. KEIM: Yes, that makes it all right. Thank you.

HENRY PENROD: Your paper by some person's mistake was sent to Stoystown instead of Chesnut Hill. Right now.

How the Gates Came Ajar.

'Twas whispered one morning in Heaven,
That the little child-angel, May,
In the shade of the great white portal
Sat sorrowing night and day;
How she said to the stately warden,
He of the key, and bar,
"O angel; dear angel! I pray you
Let the beautiful gates ajar.

"I can hear my mother weeping—
She is lonely and cannot see
A glimpse of light and darkness
Where the gates shut after me.
O turn once the key, dear angel,
The splendor will shine so far."
But the angel answered, "I dare not Set the beautiful gates ajar."

Then up rose Mary the blessed,
She laid and the toch sufficed—
Turned was the key in the portal.
Unloosed was the golden bar
And lo! in the angel child's fingers
Stood the beautiful gates ajar.

"And the key for further using
To my blessed Son shall be given,"
Said Mary the Mother of Jesus,
Tenderest heart in Heaven.
Now there's never a sad eyed Mother,
But may catch the glory afar
Since safe in the Savior's bosom,
Are the keys of the gates ajar.

The Work to be Done.

Children are not things. The sculptor may chisel an evangelic form from the rough block of marble, but it is not so easy to make an angel out of a boy.

The potter may mould the plastic clay into a vessel of honor or dishonor, as it shall please him, but children are not clay.

An author may write upon white paper a beautiful biography; but a childhood is not a pice of white paper.

"As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined;" but a child is not a twig, and he cannot be made straight by tying him to a stake.

Things can be hewn, moulded, pulled, pressed, or driven into shape. Persons are not things. Each child has a will of his own that no human being can drag, pound, bribe or force to yield to his commands. You may gag his mouth so that he cannot utter profane words, but you cannot prevent him from thinking swear. You may pry open his jaws, and pour brandy down his throat, but you cannot compel him to break his pledge of total abstinence. Nor bribes nor threats can force his will, if he will not yield. Nebuchadnezzar tried the whole force of the Chaldean realm upon Shadrack, Meshach and Abednego in vain. Daniel could be thrown into the lion's den, but Darius could not stop his praying.

In spite of every human force or bribe, the child may choose the right or choose the wrong.

And yet, in an important sense, nothing is more readily controlled than the human will. But success herein is only attained inharmony with the law of life. "He that wineth souls is wise." He must be wise in the understanding of human nature, wise in the knowledge of truth, and wise in the application of truth to the control of the life.

In view of the work of the parent or of the Sabbath-school teacher we, wonder not that any should exclaim, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

In the right development of the child into a noble Christian manhood, there are at least three important attainments to be secured:

1. His regeneration
2. A true Christian culture.
3. A thorough Christian training.

The young heart must be enlisted as a cheerful volunteer, to serve as a soldier under the banner of the cross of Christ.

The young soldier must be properly rationed, fed upon the sincere milk and strong meat of the word; armed with the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit. His loins must be girt about with truth, and his feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace.

Having on the whole armor of God, he must then be trained to use it efficiently in the promotion of the interests of the kingdom of grace.

The conversion of the children to Christ accomplished, the work of the Christian parent and Sabbath-school teacher is only begun.

What life-work more noble than that of an educator of childhood into christian manhood!

To assist us in the right exercise of this life-work, we need to have correct views of our resources. We need to know where our strength lies; the nature of the instrumentality to be employed; and how far we ourselves are responsible for success or failure.

Undesirable Fame.

A few years since, while visiting my native town, a friend stopped me on the walk to introduce a former resident of the village. I remembered him as a near neighbor twenty years before. In the conversation, I alluded to one of his boys, as having made some stir as a burlesque writer. I did not expect the reply he gave me. He hesitated a moment, then spoke deliberately, almost reluctantly, I thought. "Yes, M——has gained a certain kind of notoriety, but it is not of a very desirable kind. With a higher aim, and the same diligence, he would have accomplished something more gratifying to me, and a few years hence, if not now, more gratifying to himself."

Twenty years before, I had known this man in the prime of life. He was then a worldly man, with some ambition himself as a lawyer and writer, but not, it was thought, of a very elevated kind. These twenty years had wrought some change in him. His hair and beard were silvered over. He needed now for support the cane he carried. His views of life were sedate and mature. They were not Christian views, but he had come to distinguish the value of that which is permanent from that which is ephemeral. His ambition for his children is no higher than it had been for himself. Immediate money-gains and notoriety among the lovers of vulgar literature, were not to be put in comparison with a reputation for high and noble aims and the accomplishment of something really praiseworthy.

Young men who write for the press will do well to reflect upon the deliberate judgment of this silver-bearded lawyer. Paternal fondness did not blind him to applaud the ignoble in his son; and as years increase, no amount of personal vanity will so becloud your moral perceptions, as to prevent your wishing yourself one of that noble race of writers, who, "dying, leave no line which they could wish to blot."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry:—On last Saturday, October 11th, the brethren held a love-feast in Eagle Creek branch, Hancock county, Ohio, which was well attended, and, we believe resulted in much good. Four accessions to the church. Though we regret that we could not be with the brethren and sisters during the day services, owing to the solemn fact that our dear brother Daniel lay a lifeless corpse. In a former article in the COMPANION, our readers will notice that we have had much sickness and death among our relatives during the past few months. Our dear sisters who were then prostrated with disease are now about fully recovered. But our brother then took sick while we were east, looking up a stock of goods. When we arrived home we ascertained that he was sick; we drove over and found him very sick. Medical aid had been summoned, and we prayed for favorable results. But ah! The divine baffled the skill of the physician summoned, and we saw that we must give him up. We did all we could for our dear brother. The kind neighbors assisted us. We solicited the Lord's aid. We prayed, if agreeable to his will, to raise him up; but the Lord saw otherwise and took him home. "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord." In the evening of the 12th, about the setting of the sun, we followed the slow, sable hearse, which contained the corpse of our brother, to the Brethren's grave-yard, and there saw him lowered in the grave, which was also witnessed by hundreds of spectators. Oh, how solemn a scene! We, with the rest of father's family, then remained for the evening services, where we again enjoyed the company of God's children. Next day, (Sabbath) at the hour of half past ten o'clock, the funeral sermon of our brother was delivered to a very large congregation of sympathizing friends and relatives, by I. J. Rosenberger, from Job 19: 25, 26. Words of consolation were given unto us, yet our greatest consolation must come from him who dwells on high. Earnest appeals were made to the unconverted, to turn to God, setting forth the certainty of death and the uncertainty of life. All were requested to examine ourselves and see whether we know, in accordance with the Scripture, that our Redeemer lives. Thus our dear brother passed away, he being the fourth relative that we have followed to the grave within the last four months. We possess a lively hope that he too is with God at rest. He obeyed the injunctions of the Savior in early youth. Was received into the church and lived a consistent life. Those sore afflictions press us with grief very much, yet we do not feel to give up our faith in God. Oh, no! but are yet willing to bear the cross a little while longer, for soon it may be our lot to fall, then if we are faithful we can, like him, go in peace. When we go among our relatives we see many hearts pressed with grief. Our aged parents, by nature and by law, whose heads are becoming white by the frost of many winters, are bowed with sorrow over the loss of their children. When wife and I go to our old homes to visit our parents we see the vacant chair at the table. When we approach the Lord in prayer around the domestic altar, we find the number less. When we go to church we find their voices still in death. Our brother's voice, which we still heard in supplication to God in the Sabbath-school room, will no more cheer us on this side of the cold and silent grave. But if we prove faithful a few years, or, perhaps only a few days longer, we shall meet all loved ones gone before. We hope the readers of the COMPANION will remember us at the throne of grace, that we may be enabled to bear up under these our sore afflictions; that we may still bear the cross a little longer, and fight a good fight and at last join all the faitful in heaven. At present writing our friends and relatives are all about well, and we pray that this siege of sickness may be stayed, nevertheless, "not our will, but the Lord's be done."

Your brother in Christ.

Oct. 6th, 1872

Dear Editors: Permit me to present you the following "news from the churches." About a month ago I paid a visit to the Lime-stone Church, Washington county, this state. Many of your readers will remember this church as being the place where the A. M. was held in 1860; also as having a committee sent to it from the A. M. of 1871, to settle difficulties of a peculiar and complicated nature; and not until said committee had made a report to the last A. M were the difficulties finally settled.

We met with the members at a "harvest thanksgiving," and as we sat and looked over the congregation, we thought we beheld a calm resignation depicted on the countenance of every one, as though each one had passed through some fiery trial, but was now resigned to his condition. The parties set aside by the committee from the A. M. were reinstated, and I think I can safely say, the church is in better condition than it had been for a number of years.

On Sabbath we had the pleasure of addressing the Sabbath-school, which is yet in its infancy, and were pleased to see such an interest manifested by the old brethren and sisters present. During our stay, eight precious souls were buried in a watery grave. I believe all were members of the Sabbath-school. I believe good impressions were made upon others who are very near the kingdom.

On our return home we stopped two days at Bull's Gap, Hawkins county. Here we met a peculiar case. A man who had been under conviction for some time and desired to join the church, was strenuously opposed by his wife and mother-in-law, who called to their aid two pedo-baptist ministers. The man however was firm, and came forth and was baptized by us. His wife, too, was so far reconciled as to take a seat beside him at the services before baptism. She deserves our earnest prayers. We just closed a protracted meeting of ten days, and the result was six additions to the church. The ark of the Lord is moving southward and we solicit the prayers of the church in its behalf.

Queries.

Will some brother or sister be kind enough to give us an explanation on Rev. 12: 6, 14; also 14: 4, 5.

RICHARD POLLARD.

In John 5: 39 we read, "Search the Scriptures; for therein ye think ye have eternal life." The query is, do we only think so? or why did he not say, in them ye know, &c.?

DALE CITY, PA, Oct. 23, 1872.

A short letter to my dear children, and all who wish to hear from me. I am at this time in the COMPANION OFFICE, and am well; thank the good Lord for it. I do hope you are all well, and also the dear members and neighbors. I have visited many dear members since I left home, and found them kind and loving. I stayed with brother C. M. Beachly last night. He is the Dr. Beachly, a very kind brother, and his wife, the sister is a very pleasant sister, and the children are very pleasant, and I was very well entertained by them. I have not seen many folks yet in this place, as I am writing; but friend Dr. Fahrney stepped into the office, just a few minutes ago. I had a pleasant talk with him; he is a very friendly man, and is now living in Dale City. This evening I think to go to the love-feast, some 3 miles from here, where I hope to find many of our dear members and get acquainted with them, and enjoy myself with them. From here I will go to Bedford City, hold a meeting there on the 25th, evening. From there I will go back to Yellow Creek congregation at New Enterprise. Stay there several days. Then I think to go back to Clover Creek; thence to James Creek, and stay at James Creek till the 10th of November. Thence I think to go to Philadelphia and Germantown. I think to be at Germantown until the 15th of November, if the Lord will.

Now I wish to say to my dear children and all the members that may see this, that they ought to become readers of the COMPANION. Do try to get all the subscribers. Do save a little as you go along, and by so doing we can hear from each other and hear how they do. I have met with many members that I had never seen, but read some articles in periodicals with their names, so I still had some knowledge of them, and it gives me much satisfaction.

I will close for this time, by wishing you all the blessings of God. Hope you will remember me in your prayers. From your well-wishing father and brother.

JOHN KNISLEY.

PARKERSBURG, ILL., Oct. 21st, '72.

By the earnest request of many dear brethren with whom I met in my travels I will say, that the good Lord has been with me—has been my shield, my kind protector—and I feel to thank the giver of all good, for his kind care over me. During the whole year of my travels I was well till the 9th of Sept., at Neosho Falls. I was then unwell till about the first of October. Since then I have been well. Here I will say to the many who feel interested in my welfare, that I arrived at home on the 18th. Found all well. On the next day I was met by many brethren and sisters, and enjoyed a blessed communion season together at my residence; and many requests were made to come and hold meetings with them. But the time for me to remain with them is short, as I have promised to go East before Christmas, if life and health permit. So I will close by saying, be steadfast and always abound in the work of the Lord; so that, if we never meet here on earth, we may meet to part no more. This is my prayer. Remember me when it goes well with you.

MICHAEL FORNEY.

Annie W. Reedy writes, I have not been able to move a foot or limb for eight months. I was always healthy until I lifted very heavy which caused a severe pain in my side for about two years, and then settled in my back a week or two, and finally caused a numbness and weakness in back and limbs. I am very nervous. I have spent the summer better than I expected, but do not know how I will stand the coming winter. I like to read the COMPANION and I think if I live another year I will send for it again.

EDITOR OF THE C. F. C., Dear Sir:—I write to inform you of a sad accident, by lightning. On the morning of the 5th of this month, the dwelling of brother Orval Fisher, was struck by lightning, and the family more or less shocked. Brother Fisher himself was so severely injured that his life was at first despaired of, shocking and burning him in a fearful manner; most of his clothes, and one boot being torn to pieces. He is now slowly recovering, but he suffered the most intense pain for several days.

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?

What has become of "A Reader of your paper?" Has he become convinced of the truth? Has he any more objections or arguments to offer in the negative? If he has let us hear from him; if he has not, let him be honest, become obedient, and give God the glory.

Tune and Hymn Book.

Brother Isaac Hufford says:

Tune and Hymn Book I received. I have examined it, and found that it contains nothing but Church Hymns, and none of those foolish love songs that are contained in many of the note books of the day. I recommend it among the Brethren. The book is in good order; well bound, good print, and good, plain notes. I thought it should be in every family of the Brethren. Oh, how soul-cheering it is to have a full congregational choir! ISAAC HUFFORD.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Duncansville branch, Blair county, Penn'a., October 9th, sister NANCY BENTON; aged 27 years and 13 days. Disease, inflammation of the lungs.

Our sister was sick but a short time, and was sensible to the last. She felt that the time of her departure was drawing near, and desired to be anointed, and once more commune with her fellow pilgrims in the church militant. After this was attended to, she seemed perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord; and, as the rays of light from the upper sanctuary began to draw upon her weary spirit, she told her friends to prepare to meet her in heaven. Finally, in the evening of the above named day, with weeping friends around, serenely and peacefully she passed from earth away. We mourn the loss of one we loved, but we would not call her back; for we believe that she "did what she could," and is now mingling in the harmony of the pure and the blessed. Funeral services by brother Jacob Miller and the writer, from the words, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." Heb 9 . 27.

JAS A. SELL.

In the Elk Lick congregation, on Friday night Oct. 18th, WM HENRY BEAR, son of Jacob H. and Mary Bear, aged 9 months 18 days. "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Funeral services by brethren Ephraim Cober and Joel Gnagy. Text, 2 Samuel 12 : 19—23.

DAVID GERBER was born May 3rd, 1801, in Somerset county, Pa.; moved to Stark county, Ohio, with his father, in 1812, and from there with his family to Lagrange Co., Indiana in 1855, where he remained until the 2d of September 1872, when, in a good old age he fell asleep in death, leaving a very good character behind for his family to pattern after, and we hope all is well with him. He was a member, for many years, of the Amish Church, and a number of his children belong to the Brethren. His age was 71 years 3 months and 28 days. Funeral service from 1st Thessalonians 4th chapter, commencing at the 13th verse, in German by the Amish Bishop Smooker, and in English by Elder D. M. Truby. Disease, dropsy.

On the 23rd of September, near Sabbath Rest, Blair county, Penn'a., ADDIE CAROLINE MALOY, aged 3 years and 4 months. Text, Mark 10 : 14—16.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For the COMPANION.

Close Communion--Our Reasons for it.

For the satisfaction of those who may wish to know, we will give the following reasons for Close Communion. We must take the religious world just as we find it, and not as we wish it. In its divided and distracted state, we know of no better or more consistent course than to hold Close Communions, when we hold them at all.

Our reasons are as follows:

1. It is no indication of the love that does exist in the so-called Christian churches, for them to commune together: and if treatment is to form our judgment, we conclude that love is almost, if not altogether, out of the question. We are invited to commune with others, and sometimes, they almost seem offended because we refuse; and perhaps the same day these would-be friends ridicule our doctrine and practice, as though we were the most stupid, deceived people on earth. We can not feel like going to the table with them. "Let us not love in word, but in deed and in truth."

2. For the Brethren, it is the only consistent way. Because as a people we are separate and peculiar. We urge upon our membership, to obey all our Master's teachings, even to the least or lowest of them, and do not admit that any one of them is unnecessary or non-essential; for we hold as a perfect Law-giver, that Divine Mind which spake as never man spake. It could not be consistent in us to require our people to observe these things, and then admit to communion with them, those who neglect and even scoff at the plain "Thus saith the Lord." Why need we have a church at all, if there is no boundary to it. How can we have a field without a fence around it?

3. Because then the institution would fail of its design. Nature itself teaches us, and very plainly does the Holy Word teach, that we should be "perfectly joined together,"—Should be at peace among ourselves, and let all anger and clamor, and malice, and wickedness be put away from among us. We as a people labor to bring these things about among ourselves, and especially at the times of our communion. And it is our wish that this good work of making peace among brethren could be more effectually done. We think we have a right thus to deal with our own membership, and even to exclude some from the table, whose conduct may have been disorderly, either against the church or against a brother, and who will not make satisfaction for the same. We say we have a right thus to act, as a body of believers, with such of our members as may have been out of the Christian's path; but against those who are not our membership, although they may have a name in other churches, we have no right to deal. So then, that we may not offend any, or be inconsistent with our profession, or let the light that should be in us be darkness to the world we invite no one.

4. We invite none because we know not whom to invite, or where to stop. Should we invite those with whom we are surrounded, we find as much division, and as little love and Christian forbearance amongst them and between each other as between us and them. Nor is this all; if we invite one sect, we must invite another, and so on, till all are invited; and in case our meeting was composed of some twenty different organizations, as with us, what a confused, selfish disorganized mass would we have brought together! We very much doubt, whether the name Christian would apply at all. But further, we said we must take the world just as we find it, and so we must. Well in our part we have a score or more different religious bodies, all claiming to be Christians and the "The Church," and we have some men who are not in connection with any church who claim to be as good as any of the professed good people; and who no doubt are better than many. Well reader, now let us bring the Bible to bear. Its teachings are pointed and plain, and its divine Author no respecter of persons. Its duties are many, but impart much pleasure. God's commandments must be obeyed, or the Will of God is not done. Our people claim to have that Will and to follow it, although often at a great distance. We have our meeting, called the love-feast meeting. We are surrounded by hundreds of people classed in a score of religious bodies. They charge us with selfishness, and to clear ourselves of the charge we invite all in good standing in the churches to which they belong (this I have heard myself) to come and partake with us. We invite those whom we think are nearest the Gospel rule, thus making judges one of another, and not as the Bible will tell us, to "let every man examine himself, and so let him eat." We invite the first and the way is now open, and we must invite the 2d, 3d, 4th, and so on down the scale until all are invited or we will cause more hardness than to have invited none. And shall we now stop? Oh no! There is one neighbor a good moral man, who, although not a member of a church, is a strong believer in Holy Writ. He is a man we love, we know where his sympathies are and he has ours, and we have already invited those to whom he is superior, both in faith and conduct, because he is in good standing in society and respected by all, shall we pass him by? Not consistently by the rule we have laid down, so we invite the moral man to feast with us and feel better satisfied with his company at the Lord's table than with others who may claim more than he does. Now reader, where shall we stop? The scale upon which we began still ascends and can you tell us where to stop? Or will you not say we had better not court the favors of the world, both religious and moral, in that way any more?

5. It is plain, that some would go with us in some part of the service but not in others, and some in a second duty but not in first or third, and so there would be confusion. "God is not the author of confusion but of peace." Let us seek it by laboring for it.

6. One more reason and we are done. We ask in all candor how shall we have a church government at all if open communion is allowed? Let some member commit some crime for which he will not or can not make satisfaction and we disown him. He attaches himself to some other body and then when that body is invited to commune with us this apostate or imposter comes also. What can we do? or what does any one lose by living out off. We answer, nothing. Where is church government? We answer, there is none.

The Christian Sabbath.

In answer to a Query, represented in No. 23, present volume, permit me to pen a few lines.

We claim the authority to celebrate the first day of the week, instead of the seventh; not only to commemorate the creation of the world, but a still greater event—the completion of the work of atonement by the resurrection of Christ; and as he rose from the dead on the day after the Jewish Sabbath, that day of his resurrection has been observed by Christians ever since. The change appears to have been made at once, and as is generally believed, under the direction of the "Lord of the Sabbath." On the same day, the first day of the week, he appeared among his assembled disciples; and on the next recurrence of the day he was again with them, and revealed himself to Thomas; 1 Cor. 11: 20; 14: 23—40.

It appears that the disciples in all places were accustomed to meet statedly, to worship and celebrate the Lord's supper; and from 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2. we learn that these meetings were on the first day of the week. Thus, Acts 20: 6–11, we find the Christians at Troas assembled on the first day, to partake of the supper and to receive religious instructions. John observed the day with peculiar solemnity. Rev. 1: 10; and it had then received the name of "The Lord's supper;" which it has ever since retained.

For a time such of the disciples as were Jews observed the Jewish sabbath also; but they did not require this nor the observance of any festival of the Mosaic dispensation, of Gentile converts, nor even of Jews; Col. 2: 16. Thus we learn by the above named Scriptures, that our early Christian fathers refer to the first day of the week, as the time set apart for worship, and to the transfer of the day on account of the resurrection of the Savior. Oh! brethren and sisters, let us not profane the Sabbath.

Shall we Know our Friends in Heaven?

In current vol., No. 40, under this heading, we read Brother L. West's views on the subject of heavenly recognition. He says: "We do not believe that we shall know our friends in heaven," and gives his reasons for believing so. We shall try to give our views, not attempting to criticise or with any desire of controversy, but shall merely give our views on this subject.

"Shall we know our friends in heaven?" a question of intense interest, and agreeable, especially if we have encouragement to hope for an affirmative answer. We believe that we will know our friends in heaven. If we exclude the recognition of friends and loved ones, it would be exceedingly difficult for us to conceive of a perfect state of happiness in heaven. Sanctified friendship, next to our communion with God and his beloved Son, is the greatest source of our happiness and enjoyment on earth. However high our views of future heavenly glory may be from the hope and prospect of dwelling forever in the presence of God, it must be in some degree imperfect, if we leave out the recognition of those whom we have known and loved on earth, and conceive all strangers to us in that heaven of perfect bliss. The recognition of those whom we have known here, and with whom we have mingled together in Christian society, seems necessary for our future happiness to be perfect.

Paul says, "Charity never faileth." This truth, we think, strongly favors the idea that we shall know our friends in heaven, when applied to the subject before us. Love is the basis of all social happiness: supreme love to God, and to man, and such evidently must exist in the future heavenly world. And is it not a truth that knowledge must accompany love? for how could we love God, having no knowledge of the amiable character of God? We must have a knowledge of what we love. From this way of reasoning we infer that we shall recognize in heaven those whom we have known and loved here on earth. We cannot see how we can love each other and not know each other. Now, friendships must be made in heaven, or there must be a renewal of friendships which had before existed, before love can be exercised toward each other intelligently, and in either way we certainly shall know and recognize each other in heaven.

Again, it is evident that memory will continue in another life. We do not believe that any of the faculties of the mind will be destroyed in heaven; but we believe they will be more developed, and their capacities enlarged. Now, if we believe there will be social intercourse among the inhabitants of heaven, and communication of ideas—and we think none doubt this—and if memory continues to exist in heaven, by which the mind has a knowledge of what it had before known, felt or thought, then recognition of friends will be the inference that seems to be legitimately drawn from the premises. That memory will exist in heaven, and not only exist, but be active, is evident from Abraham's language to the rich man: "Son remember, that thou in thy life time receivdst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented." The rich man had not forgotten his five brethren, neither had he forgotten his father's house. The rich man was not in heaven, it is true; but he was in torment, and remembered his friends on earth, and things that had occurred on earth. Can we doubt that those in heaven will have the faculty of memory? The indestructibility of the faculties of the mind affords proof that we shall recognize our friends in heaven.

Should there be no Scripture to sustain it, such proofs as we have given are enough to sustain the doctrine that we shall know our friends in the future heavenly world. But the holy Scriptures afford us still stronger proof to sustain us in the hope of heavenly recognition of friends and loved ones.

First, we refer the reader to 2d Samuel, 12th chapter. Here we find David sinned, and God threatened to take away his child. "The child that is born unto thee shall surely die." The thought was very afflicting to David, that he should lose his child. He "therefore besought God for the child; and David fasted, and went in and lay all night upon the earth." And in the 18th verse we read that the child died. "Then David arose from the earth and washed and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into the house of the Lord, and worshipped. Then he came to his own house; and, when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat." Then David was cheerful, and his servants were surprised. But the ground of his cheerfulness was his hope. "I shall go to him," was his hope, and it gave him great comfort. "I shall go to him" does not merely imply that David would die and that his body would be laid beside that of his child. Such a reflection would not have given him comfort. No, it evidently implied that he anticipated the glorious and welcome time when his own spirit should go to that of his child in heaven, and there recognize it as the object of parental love. Oh, how consoling the thought, that the grave will not forever hide from view those we have loved!

That impressive and instructive history or parable given us by our Savior, of the rich man and Lazarus, affords proof to sustain us in our views of heavenly recognition. Now, it is plainly declared that the rich man knew Abraham and Lazarus: "And in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom; and he cried and said: Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame." He also speaks of his father's house, and says: "I have five brethren." Here he acknowledges a relationship still existing between him and his brethren, though he is in the world invisible, and in hell, and they here in the visible world of time. Abraham calls him "son," showing that he knew him to be a Jew. He also reminds him of things in his life time, by which is acknowledged the continuation of memory and consciousness, which evidently implies recognition.

Paul gives us proof to sustain us in the hope of knowing our friends in heaven, in 1 Thess., iv: 13–18. At Thessalonica some of the Christians were mourning and sorrowful. They did not mourn that they thought their dead should be lost; neither did they mourn that they feared they themselves should be lost; for the Apostle says to them that they "sorrow not even as others sorrow which have no hope." And this shows that they had a hope. The cause, then, was that death had separated from them those whom they dearly loved. They needed comfort, and Paul, in his words of comfort to them, makes the happy meeting of the saints at the coming of the Lord a special point. He says: "The dead in Christ shall rise first." The bodies of those for whom they mourned with all the dead in Christ shall be resurrected. Then the living should be changed and "be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air," and those who come with him—the disembodied saints—those for whom they mourned, included. So they should meet each other and the Lord in the air, and ever be together. Now, if these bereaved Christians, for whose comfort the Apostle was writing, could not recognize their friends, should they meet them in the clouds, how could they derive comfort from the prospect of such a meeting? But should they know each other, the anticipation of such a meeting would be comfort indeed. Conclusively, Paul teaches in this passage heavenly recognition. Other passages we might refer to, but we forbear for the present. Praises be to God that he has given us grounds for such a "lively hope" that we shall know our friends in heaven. Who can conceive of the rapture and glory that will possess and fill the souls of the glorified and redeemed in heaven, within the walls of the celestial city, when they become joined and united in eternal bonds of love and friendship with those whom we have known and loved on earth.

"The Christian's hope, a glorious hope,
A hope by Jesus given;
A hope, when days and years are past,
we all shall meet in heaven.

Autumn.

The summer is gone; its reign was brief; the birds no longer haunt the woods, making our hearts glad with their sweet carols. They have felt the cold breath of the winter wind afar, and have spread their wings, and have flown to a warmer climate. Yes, the bright and beautiful summer is a thing of the past, and the autumn is here with its bountiful harvests, and countless blessings. The woods are beautiful with the many shaded leaves, brown, red, yellow, and, I may say, almost every hue, from the dying green to the darkest brown. We hear them rustle as they fall; and, in the rustle of the falling leaves, and the sighing of the wind through the trees, there is a sad music to us. It teaches us that the brightest things on earth must fade and die, and that the summer-time of our life will soon be over, and the autumn come, and we will have to pass away. And as we ponder on these things, we wonder if we will be here next autumn, to watch the flowers die, and the leaves change color and fall from the the trees. We can look back over the past year, and see many vacant places, that, when the autumn was with us last, were filled with hearts that beat as high with hope as our's do now. To-day those hearts are cold and silent. Some of those places were filled by our associates, and, perhaps, by near and dear friends; and when we think of these things, we see how very uncertain life is, and realize that we may be summoned to leave this earth with all its bright and beautiful things at any time. But if God should will that we should live to be old, let us so improve our time in working for him and in obeying his commands, that, when the summer of our life is gone, and the winds of the autumn of life whisper in our ears the tidings of death, we will listen with joy at the sound, and willingly leave all things on earth, and go in peace to the far away land, where the gentle summer always reigns, where no winds ever blow, where nothing ever dies, but where the trees are ever blooming. Lest they be Discouraged.

A father had given his son a book, and as he was going away to preach at a distant appointment, he spoke of the appropriateness of his spending his leisure hours on the Sabbath in reading it.

When he was gone, a sudden impulse seized the boy to win the father's approval by seeing how much he could read.

So every moment he could gain he read in his new book, thinking all the time how pleased his father would be with his diligence. When he returned, he hastened joyfully to meet him, showing him the mark, and telling him the number of pages he had read. But the father was cold and tired, and worse still was thoughtless. So he hastily put the boy aside, with the chilling words, "You should have read twice as much." If a blow had struck the boy to the earth, it would have been a slight injury, compared to this blow to the spirit. It crushed hopelessly for the time all aspiration, all efforts after knowledge. It made him look almost with aversion on his father. The scar on the spirit was carried into manhood. The book stood on the library shelf, but the mark had never been moved. No additional page was ever read in it.

Oh, how we need to watch ourselves in these moments of weariness and perplexity! Hasty, petulant words, where a child looks for approval, are wounds to the spirit, hard indeed to bear. It takes all our manliness fortitude to meet with and even mind such disappointment, and can we be surprised that the tender child's spirit grows discouraged and bitter under them.

Alone With God.

Alone with God—where no intrusive eye,
With curious glance, our secret motives spy—
No list'ning ear shall catch the murmured tone,
Whose trembling cadence reaches God alone!

Alone with God—the curtain drawn aside,
Revealing sins, we veil to all beside—
The inner workings of the soul laid bare,
With none but him to mark the conflict there.

Alone with God! the long pent stream will flow,
The "bitter waters" of some hidden woe—
Till like the Lake on Sinai's distant plain,
His healing branch shall heal again!

Alone with God! we dare not mask the crime,
That flings it shadows o'er all future time,
Tho' long concealed from every mortal eye,
'Tis known to him who ruleth in the sky!

Alone with God—the softest sigh is borne
From lowliest bosom to his loftiest throne,
And sin's chained felon feels he may be free,
Whose heart repentant turns in faith to thee!

Alone with God—we bring the golden key,
That ope's the cells of feeling wide to thee,
The secret spring that moves the creature man,
Thy hand can measure, and thine eye can scan!

Alone with God! we bring the broken lyre—
With cords unstrung, and rust on every wire—
To him whose skill can tune each slender string,
And sweetest tones from jarring discord bring!

Alone with God! like dew upon the flower
Comes his dear Spirit in its silent power,
To raise the drooping lily's head,
Whose trampled petals richer odors shed!

Alone with God! how holy, deep, and calm,
The sweet communion, with its soothing balm—
The heart's upsoaring to it's home in heaven—
Each grief forgotten—and each sin forgiven!

Alone with God—what solemn stillness reigns—
How rapt the heart with those melodious strains,
The far-off music floating through the sky.
That vibrates softly—"God is passing by!"

Gnats.

I do not understand our Lord as condemning the straining out the gnat; but rather the swallowing the camel while doing so. He approved cleanliness in eating, but was disgusted with the taste that would eagerly and assiduously work in getting out gnats, and yet leave more objectionable things behind, and swallow them with the soup. The application to things not of the table is easy. It is a very sweeping principle. It has especial reference to a person's consistency, whether of life or of words. * * *

Some people do not like gnats, and take great pains to get them out of of their food, but overlook spiders or bugs or creeping things. They do not like small sins, and berate them furiously; yet they take pleasure in greater ones. They are punctiliously prompt in paying tithe of mint, cummin and anise, yet singularly forgetful of much more important matters. All such "strain out the gnat, and swallow the camel." There is no difficulty in understanding all this; but there may be, or, at least, seems to be, some difficulty in applying it.

I have said that I do not think the Lord advises against getting clear of gnats. Indeed, I think he approves of such cleanliness. He does not advise to scoop out the camel, and let the gnats alone. He rather admonishes us to make the food clean of all foreign things, and take it pure. "The word of the Lord is pure enlightening the eyes." He advises against any admixture with the commandments of men, assuring us that such admixture is destructive to the eyes. These I think may be called gnats. Their bite poisons the blood, swells the affected part, and sometimes festers into gangrenous ulcers. Some species kill, and all annoy. They should, therefore, all of them, both mild, and noxious species, be strained out, and thrown away to die.

One or two of our scribes has written some on straining out gnats. They seem to condemn the operation, and to think that it will be better to let them remain. This may be human wisdom; it certainly is not divine; or if so, they have not made it clear.

Suppose we regard the things mentioned by them as gnats; are they, therefore, not to be strained out? The Lord does not say so. A small sin is no less a sin, because a greater one exists. Both are to be condemned. The first may need or require only a rebuke; the other may demand denunciation and the severest punishment. God sees both, though he measures them differently, and we may do the same. He judges and condemns according to the deeds committed, and so we may judge and punish as far as this is our prerogative.

It is certainly a very inconsistent thing in men when we see them fighting away gnats, while a poisonous serpent lies in their bosom. Their attention had better be concentrated on the serpent and let the gnats alone until the reptile is put away. The gnats may only annoy, and produce festering sores; we know the serpent's sting is death. It would be very inconsistent in a man should he rebuke his brother for foolish talking, while he was lying, deceiving and cheating. The divine volume condemns both, and so should we; but should not punish the first and allow the second to go free.

If a Christian lives consistently in a godly life, he does a great work. He is then faithful in small things as well as in large ones. The effort to live consistently in the Christian life throws the attention on one's self, and directs the mind to self-examination. When a man does this, he is very apt to discover a mote in his own eye before he sees a beam in his brother's; and he will first stop and clear his own eye before he attempts an operation on his brother's. He will find the camel first and throw it out, and then proceed to get clear of the gnats.

Gnats are very small insects, and exceedingly difficult to bar out. When they begin to annoy a church, a festering sore will soon appear. Their diminutive size, sometimes made smaller by those who love them, enables the pest to effect an entrance unawares. The first we know of their presence is that we hear them buzzing their hateful songs in our ears, or feel their poisonous beak in our flesh. Then to get clear of them is the trouble and difficulty. The barriers usually applied fail to keep them out, and if one is to have rest he must go where gnats "do not congregate." They are a pestiferous tribe. Few churches are entirely free from the pest. They congregate in certain trees. Some men draw them, and as we sometimes have to fell trees to get clear of the insect, so we have to remove the attraction to get clear of their antitypes.

If you will consider the commandments and ordinances of men as gnats, and place organs, melodeons, a ritual service and priestly robes, with candles and crucifix, in the same category, so be it. We will then know what the insect is when they get into a church. There are no doubt many species, as there are in the natural world, and it is well to know them, that we may know which kill, and which are annoying, by their poisonous bite. All these things may be only gnats—may all belong to the insect world. They are for this reason the most troublesome and difficult to strain out. If they were as large as camels, our strainer would easily separate them from our soup. It will be better as the case stands to follow the old adage of economy, "Take care of the pence, and the pounds will take care of themselves." Strain out the gnats, and study cleanliness, and camels will not often fall in. If we would protect ourselves with the word of the Lord, and strive to enter the narrow gate and follow the narrow way, I imagine that even gnats would not trouble us on our journey. The gate is too narrow for camels to get through, and there will be far too little room to allow this beast to get on well. We will find the way, therefore, more infested with insects than quadrupeds. What does wisdom then advise? Evidently attention to gnats.

In fable and myth, the camel may reduce himself to a gnat and in that form pass barriers which effetually keep out quadruped. So may our favoritism dwindle an evil that is quadruple in size to the dimensions of the insect, and then introduce it where we will. We may say of this or that, that it is only a gnat, and ask admission and acceptance for it, while it may be, in fact, a camel in disguise. Some things are called gnats by one, which by another are a little heavier animal. If gnats at all, let us keep our strainer at the door. If it will keep the gnat out, we need have no fears as to camels. I do not want any one to put gnats into my food, and I will try to observe toward him the golden rule, and put none in his.

Suffering with Christ.

In my first I closed with a few thoughts on the sacrifices which Christians must make in order to suffer with Christ. In this article I wish to direct the mind to another thought bearing upon the subject—the unwillingness of professors to suffer with Christ. This arises,

1. From the frailties of human nature. Even the best of Christians have the flesh to contend against, and were it not for the grace of God the best of them would utterly fail. But this can not fully apologize for any; for it must be remembered that the grace of God is a sufficient guaranty against all moral defects of our fallen nature; and an unwillingness to suffer the will of God for Christ's sake will be sufficient evidence of an unsanctified nature. Was Christ sanctified and sent into the world? Then Christians must be also sanctified, if they would suffer with him. It is not from any want of professed devotion to Christ, but the great need of consecration to him, that the unwillingness to suffer arises. The giving up all for Christ; oh, how infinitely important it is, and yet how few do it! To lay all upon God's altar requires an effort which the flesh is unwilling to make. But, Christian brother, there was a period in your experience when you did that; if not, you are deceived. Then how is it that you are not now consecrated to Christ? Did you not, at conversion, lay all at the altar? and did you not then feel that God accepted the offering in Christ? Then you were willing to suffer with your Savior. Your flesh then yielded ready obedience to the promptings of the Holy Spirit, and you were happy in the love and service of God. Why not now? Fearful indeed is the solemn truth expressed in these words, "If any draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Reader, you ought to be better, holier, and wiser now than when you first believed. Were you willing to suffer with Christ then? You should be correspondingly willing now. Could you rejoice then when you were persecuted and evil-entreated for Christ's sake? You should have greater joy now; you should feel that your redemption is nearer than when you first believed.

2 An undue estimate of our supposed worth may create in us an unwillingness to suffer with Christ. What is man? What has he to boast of? If there is worth or merit in him, it is all of grace and not of self. No man is worth more than the value which the grace of God stamps upon him. This value can never be seen and fully understood only as it is developed through the submission of believers to the order of divine providence. This being the case, no man can honor God and his Christian profession, who allows self to interfere and intervene between God's authority and Christian duty. The divine injunction should be obeyed, even though it cost the life of men to do it. Nor will it be denied that those who suffer most willingly with Christ furnish the best proof of consecration to him. And on the other hand, those who suffer most willingly and cheerfully are those who have the least confidence in the flesh. Just in proportion as we arise in our own estimation we sink in the esteem of Christ, and fall below and come short of the great work to which we are called. Christians accomplish more by suffering the will of God than by talking his will. It is one thing to talk the will of God, but quite a different thing to suffer that will. Men may talk and boast much of the will of God and their readiness and willingness to obey it, but when put to the test, if that test should be in the way of persecution, temptation, affliction, losses, crosses, deprivations, and sacrifices, then their actions prove them insincere—they were in sport. They must be allowed to dictate for the council of heaven, and choose their own course, otherwise they can not act, no difference what it may cost the cause of Christ, which they profess to love so well. Alas for poor sinners when such men are to speak to them all the words of the Lord Jesus! Woe to the world when such examples are to be the standard of Christianity. To-day, if the many were to act the part of the few our world would be left without true Christian example. And if the whole were to adopt the principle of a part, God would be dethroned and self be constituted supreme dictator. These things are painful to record, but fearfully true, and should be the tocsin of alarm to the church throughout the land everywhere.

Less of self and more of divine grace is among the great needs of the church of Christ—its members; and in proportion as we rise with Christ we sink in self, and the nearer we approach to his perfections the more we see and realize our own imperfections. The more our hearts become imbued with his Spirit, the less are they controlled by a spirit of self-will. None should be desirous of vain glory, but all should seek to excel in the more excellent glory of Jesus Christ.

Meditations.

Quite lately, while traveling in the west, we made choice of a small steamboat on which to take passage for a western point, from the fact we knew the waters were very low, and it was difficult for large boats to get along. But many others that were going the same way chose the larger boats, because they were more commodious, of finer gilding and finish, and the fare more sumptuous, and they made faster time when they had sufficient water to run in. One of these boats had a half day's start of us, but we soon overtook her, aground on the sand. Some of the passengers were then willing to come aboard our little craft upon which they looked with disdain at the setting out. We passed on and left the large, fine boat aground on the bar.

As I stood upon the deck, and looked at the large, grand boat with her brilliant lights shining from the cabin doors and windows, I thought, how like life is this circumstance. In setting out even in religious matters, how many choose the popular, grand and dazzling "boat," to sail in, because it is more commodious or rather gives latitude? And then the fare is more to the appetite, and the company is large; and the humble "gospel ship" is looked upon with disdain. All goes well with the great boats while the river is flush, and the waters deep, and they set out with merriment and dancing, and speed swiftly along. But alas! When the "rivers run down"—or the stream of life is ebbing low, then it is that the large and popular "bark" of liberal faith cannot take its passengers to the harbor of safety or place of expected destination. Then how willing some are to come aboard the humble craft, that is making its way along without difficulty. Then do they cry, as did those passengers, to the captain, to take them aboard that they might reach their destination.

And I thought, so it will be with many "crafts of faith." They will founder upon the sandy reef and go to destruction, while the despised "Gospelship" will take its passengers safe to the harbor, where pilgrims will be landed upon the shore of eternal deliverance.

And I thought too, how like many that set out in life, choosing the fast ship of the world to sail in, because it is wide, and looks beautiful, and promises sumptuous fare, and rapid facilities to sail on to honor and wealth. The "bark" of religion is despised; but when the time comes that life's waters are low, and the last launch to be made, then there will be a cry, "Captain take me in!" Yes, Jesus is then called upon. Then his humble ship is desirable because the world with all its glare is about to wreck precious souls. Reader, despise not the well tried "Gospel ship," tis better and surer than all others. The pilot and captain will take us all safe over the river.

Evil Conscience Healed.

Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." Hebrews 10: 22.

THE EYE OF THE SOUL.

Conscience is the eye of the soul. I mean by this, that conscience is very much the same thing to the soul that the eye is to the body. God has put these eyes in our bodies that we may see where to go and what to do; and so God has put something in our souls, which we call conscience, and which is intended to show us what is right and what is wrong, what we ought to do and what we ought not to do. But the apostle speaks, in our text, of "an evil conscience." An evil conscience means, a conscience that has been injured, like a diseased eye, so we can't see properly with it. We all have such a conscience, because we are all sinners. In our text, the apostle points out the way in which this injury done to our conscience may be removed, when he speaks of "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." Here, then, we have a leaf from the tree of life for the healing of conscience.

Our subject is, "the evil conscience healed." In order to properly understand this subject, there are three questions to be asked and answered:

1. What is conscience? God makes use of conscience for several things; one of the things is, as a guide to keep us from doing wrong. You know we have reins to our horses for the purpose of guiding them in the way in which we want them to go. Our conscience are the reins by which God wishes te guide us, and if we only mind the reins we shall save ourselves a great deal of trouble. "Why did'nt you pocket some of those pears?" said one boy to another. "There was nobody there to see." "Yes, there was though," said the other boy. "There were two to see. I was there to see myself, and I never want to see myself do a mean or dishonest thing; then God was there to see me." This boy was minding the reins. Remember whenever you are tempted to do anything wrong, there are always "two to see." This shows us the true meaning of the word "conscience." It is derived from the Latin word words "Scise," to know, and "con," together. It means, knowing together. God and ourselves are the two who must know all about everything we do. There is a story told by a certain prince, which gives us a good illustration of the use of conscience. It is said, that this prince had a ring given him to wear on his finger. This ring had the strange power of contracting and squeezing his finger, whenever he was going to do anything wrong. It was given him to be a help to him in doing what is right; and he was told that as long as he wore it and regarded it, he would be happy and prosper. At first, he felt very glad to have the ring, and thought a great deal of it. But after a while he began to feel vexed at it, because it pinched him so often, and prevented him from doing what he wanted to do. One day he had set his heart on doing something that was wrong, and he knew it. His faithful ring warned him not to do so; but he was resolved to do it. Then the ring pinched him so hard that he got angry with it, plucked it off his finger, and threw it away; and then, like a horse that has broken its reins and run off, he soon found himself in great trouble.

Music.

One art of great importance, so much neglected in some seemingly intelligent communities, is music. Yet, while man, a rational being, neglects it, those innocent little birds of the forest are constantly warbling the sweetest music imaginable, and praising their great Creator. From these can man learn a lesson of immortality, of the pureness and innocence of his walk in life, if he be of a Christian character. We do not hesitate for a moment to regard it as a holy art, because there is nothing more soul-inspiring than a vibration of vocal sounds, caused by the singing praises to the great Jehovah. Persons are enabled to give vent to their feelings in singing glory and honor to their great I am. We all have given to us, an organ for almost anything; yet these organs are not capable of fulfilling their office aright, unless they be properly cultivated; and when we have these organs which are capable of being developed, we should by all means develop them: if we do not, we sin.

A Winsome Religion.

This is the special charge of Christ's followers, to move among their fellow men, and by the sweet attraction of godliness, "win" them to forsake the shamefulness and vileness of sin, and come to that pure and blessed life.

"All things that are lovely," we, as the disciples of Jesus, must put on if we would effect such a result. Is it enough with any of us that our religion is firm, that it braves danger, that it blanches not before opposition, that it speaks sharp words to every tempter, saying, "Get thee behind me, Satan?" Is it not only true, and constant, but is it in us lovely too? Is it sour, is it austere, is it grim and frowning? It has no business to be; it has no right to be. It will enkindle desire in no human bosom, except the desire to defer as long as possible any fellowship with it.

Christianity, to be winning, should show in us a pleasant face. It should chase away all dark shadows from the countenance. It should smooth the frown from the brow. It should arch pleasantly the bow of the lips. It should look with gentleness out of the eye. It should wear often a hearty and cheerful smile. It should mantle the whole face with a soft and warm-tinted light, so that every man who looks upon these harmonizing features should be made to ask, What sweet secret lurks below?

It ought to mellow and soften the tones. They have no right to be gruff and imperious. They must not be self asserting and domineering. The way in which some Christians speak, with downright cadences, imperative, peremptory, dictatorial, as though there were a strenuous hardship of self-will in them, overriding other men's views, feelings and wishes, repels men from them, and makes some gentle-spoken worldling far more lovely by contrast. This is not wise nor right. It is very unfortunate and very wrong.

Our religion ought to pervade our manners. It is the highest law of pure and true courtesy. It can not be indifferent to any man's feelings, nor blind to his discomforts. It must think of his accommodation before our own. It must insist upon his taking precedence, "in honor preferring" him to ourselves. It must give him the inside of the walk, the head of the pew, half of the seat in the car, his right to his own judgment, respect for his opinions, room for his peculiarities and idiosyncrasies. When Christianity in any of its confessors forgets to be polite, lays aside the apostolic injunction, "be courteous," indulges in little petty self-preferments and self-securities, which worldly good breeding adjures, it does not win men; it only invites them to dislike and despise it. It denies its own nature; for if it be anything, it is love in the heart and love in the life.

The Christian should be the kindest of men; so ready to serve another, so willing to wait himself, so open-handed, accepting disturbance of his plans and convenience so graciously, so cheerful and ready in the small offices of ministering to his neighbor's comfort, that it should be a perpetual marvel to the lookers-on how he can carry about with this unfailing spirit of practical and hearty beneficence.

Do you say, of course a Christian will be and do this, if he be truly what we call him? Ah it would seem sometimes as though a man had acquired something of the substance of this transformed character, when he is thoughtless about its expression. Some minds confuse themselves in regard to character and manners, by separating and discriminating where there is no room for such discrimination. The expressions of character are a part of it, no mean part of it, the whole practical part of it.

Genuine Christianity ought to shine forth in all these forms of sweetness, gentleness, consideration, sympathy and kindness, if it would charm men to its beauty and loveliness, and detach them from the odious reign of selfishness by winning them to itself. —Week Day Lecture, by A. L. Stone, D. D.

The Hindoo Boy's Prayer.

A missionary tells us that he was once walking in his garden, when a poor Hindoo boy, who belonged to the mission school, came after him, and, in a very gentle voice, said:

"If you please, sir, make me a Christian."

The missionary was quite surprised at what he heard, and said to the little heathen boy: "I cannot make you a Christian, my dear child, but God can. You must ask God to forgive your sins for Jesus Christ's sake, and to send his Holy Spirit to live in your heart."

Not a long time after, the same little boy came to the missionary, and said, with a soft voice and a sweet smile on his face:

"The Lord Jesus himself has come to live in my heart."

"How is that?" asked the kind missionary.

"I prayed," said the little boy, "as you told me; and I said, 'O, Lord Jesus Christ, if you please, make me a Christian.' And he was so kind as to hear me, and to come and live in my heart ever since."

A simple and touching story of the love of Christ to a poor little heathen child! Can all our readers say they have ever made such a prayer in such a spirit as this poor Hindoo boy? And can they say that Christ lives in their hearts? If he does, then they will be like Christ in their temper and conduct, and be trying to please and honor him in every way they can.

Editor's Diary.

The first thing in order this week is an apology, or at least a correction. In last week's paper about one-half column of the latter part of our Diary was cut off by the item under the heading of "Brethren's Almanac for 1873." It was discovered after about half of the issue had been worked off, but was not changed. All that follows the line "Send in orders immediately," to the succeeding column dash, belongs to our visit to brother Balsbaugh. Please mark it, by drawing a pencil line around the item.

Arrived safely at Harrisburg, and took up lodgings, until Saturday 19th, at 3 A. M., when the train was to leave, but for some reason unknown to us, it did not leave until about five. And then when it did start it did not appear to move along like a through train ought to do. Especially since we wanted it to make connections at Huntingdon with the Broad Top train, and we were exceeding anxious to get home. At Mt. Union, wife and daughter again joined us, having stopped at Mr. Bare's. So far all was right. But the train travelled so slowly, even stopping at such small places as Mapleton. For once we felt like being egineer ourself. At last we reached Huntingdon, but no train for Bridgeport until Monday. Of course we at once took the "horrors," for, in addito our own disappointment, we participated with those at home, who expected us without fail, this evening. Oh! how we were mortified! And all to no purpose, for we could not, now remedy the matter. And then the James Creek love-feast was only ten miles distant, which was to commence at two o'clock this afternoon; if we could only get there, into the society of the Brethren! Even that we could not do until in the evening. The train from the west landed sister Phebe Zook, and sister Bashoar, who also wished to go to the meeting, but must wait until evening. So we gathered our luggage into the waiting room, and Lottie and I were stationed as a guard, while the sisters went to seek the abode of brother A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D. One soon returned and reported them from home, as we indeed expected they should be, as they belong to the James Creek congregation. But not long after Dr. B. came in search of us, having only been temporary absent when our reporter left his house, and sister B. only having gone to the meeting. Thus we still had a pleasant entertainment, as brother Andrew did all in his power to make us happy; and we were made to feel ashamed for having been so blue; but then it is no small matter to be disappointed as we were.

After dinner, Dr. B. took us in his buggy to interview West Huntingdon. It is really surprising to observe how rapidly the place is improving. That which was a houseless common a few years ago is now a beautiful town, with a number of first class residences, and several fine business houses.

"What has your town to create such enterprise?" we asked. "The Railroad principally," was the answer. Many of the Railroad men have their residences here. But there are also manufacturies, some of which are worthy of note; one of which we visited. It is the Keystone Boot and shoe manufactory. The main-building is 120x30 feet, and three stories high; the engine house 34x30 feet; the leech house 50x15 feet. The Company finishes its own stock, and therefore knows what is used. We had the pleasure of examining some of their work, and venture our reputation as a judge, by pronouncing it first class. Huntingdon may well be proud of the institution. Major H. S. Wharton, is President, and P. M. Burbank, Superintendent, both clever fellows.

Before we leave Huntingdon, we must not forget to mention the beautiful site for a College. About one mile west of the town, is an elevation which appears to have been especially thrown up for a location for some public institution. The scenery is grand beyond description. At a distance can be seen the mountains and hills, dressed in their coats of many colors, overlooking the tallest steeples that rise from the town at the base. If a Normal School should be wanted in that section of country, that Normal Hill is the finest location in our knowledge.

Dr. Brumbaugh has our thanks for his indefatigable labors to make us comfortable, in our perplexity; and we hope he may not soon have another case of such persistant melancholy. In the evening we took the train for the James Creek meeting-house where we landed soon after six o'clock; but too late to participate in the exercises. This was the first time for years that we sat back and looked on, at communion occasion, and we were made solemnly to meditate upon the expression "Too late!" Oh! if we should be so unfortunate as to be too late when the bridegroom comes, so that we could not participate at the great Marriage Supper of the Lamb! These earthly disappointments can be compared to that, only as time would compare with eternity. Dear reader, participate with us in this profitable meditation, and let us endeavor at all times to have upon us the wedding garment of righteousness.

The meeting was well attended, and the order was rather good. As we were sitting back, perhaps we might be permitted to make a few criticisms, especially as we mean it all for good. In the first place we don't like the love sick song

"Round is the ring that has no end,
So is my love to you my friend," at the time of passing the salutation. We think entire silence would be more impressive, and much more edifying. We do not like to give any occasion at such times especially, for facetious remarks among the young people.

Once more. We think the custom of ridding off the tables while the last hymn is being sung, is very objectionable. We witnessed it at several places during our travels, and it invariably created confusion. The meeting having been closed with prayer, the announcements made, and now while singing, the brethren commence carrying away, and setting the dishes together, the people naturally suppose the meeting concluded, and leave the house. If the last hymn belongs to the exercises of the evening, then let it be sung in order. Then let the meeting be dismissed in order. We have felt sad after having a quiet orderly meeting, to see it break up in general confusion. The custom alluded to originated at places where the people are so unmannerly as to rush upon the tables, after being dismissed; and of course where that is the case it may be proper. But we think there are few such places, and would be fewer still, if the people were properly spoken to upon this subject. These remarks are not specially intended for James Creek, for they were already decided against it, but for general good.

The foreign ministers present were John Knisely, of Indiana, John Spanogle, of Augwick, Pa., J. R. and G Hanawalt, of Spring Run, Pa., Daniel Snowberger, Leonard Furry, John B. Replogle, and Joseph Replogle, of Yellow Creek Pa., and Jacob Steel of Hopewell, Pa., being a full board.

We took up our lodgings at brother Henry Brumbaughs's, with other brethren and sisters.

SUNDAY, 20th. Attended preaching at the meeting-house at nine o'clock. Good attendance. In the afternoon there was no appointment, but a number of brethren and sisters gathered in the house, and engaged in singing. After singing for some time, some of the brethren spoke upon different subjects. Preaching again in the evening, when we had the pleasure of once more hearing brother John Spanogle. His discourse was based upon 1 John 3: 1—3. The Attendance was large.

Lodged at sister Brumbaugh's, living in the same house with brother Isaac Brumbaugh.

MONDAY, 21st. Once more we set our faces homeward. The kind families from whose house we departed, supplied us with a box of fine grapes, of which brother Isaac had raised several hundred bushels. They have our thanks. Met quite a number of brethren and sisters on the train, who scattered off along the road, until at Mt. Dallas, when we were left alone. At Bridgeport we had a long wait, from one to five o'clock, and only twenty-three miles from home. Finally the train came along, and shortly after seven o'clock we were safely at home, and there were some glad hearts we know. Found our affairs in as good condition as could reasonably be expected, excepting that the COMPANION was several days behind time.

TUESDAY, 22d. Did some work in the office and received a number of visits. In the evening a number of friends arrived by the train, with a view of attending our lovefeast, to commence to-morrow. We cannot name them all, but we had the pleasure of entertaining brethren John W. Brumbaugh and John Replogle, of Morrison's Cove. The others were cared for elsewhere.

WEDNESDAY, 23d. Oh! what a bad day for our feast; raining all day, and very muddy. Rain is needed, but it would have suited us better a few days later. The meeting commenced at four P. M., and such a trump we had not in our five weeks' travel. Notwithstanding we had a fair attendance of the membership, but very few spectators. The meeting was very quiet and orderly, and after all, the rainy weather may have been for good.

Brethren Grabill Myers, J. W. Brumbaugh, John Knisely, Daniel Snowberger, John B. Replogle, constituted our ministerial board, with some from adjoining congregations.

THURSDAY, 24th. Attended preaching at ten A. M., at our Mechanicsburg meeting house, where the lovefeast was held. The weather still rainy, yet we had a fair attendance. The brethren spoke from Romans 12, brother Myers leading off in German, and brother Brumbaugh in English, other brethren following, and we had a good meeting.

In the evening had preaching in our Dale City meeting-house. Brother Knisely spoke from the words "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ and Jesus," Phil. 25, and endeavored to impress the importance of having the mind of Christ, which always was to do his Father's will. Brother Myers followed.

Had the pleasure of entertaining Sister Fannie Harshberger and her brother George, of Bloody Run, Pa., of whom we had received favors on our late visit.

FRIDAY, 25th. Went to Pittsburgh on business. Still raining, and the river rising. There was meeting at our meeting-house in the evening, by brethren Brumbaugh and Myers, and the brethren reported a good meeting. Text: Hebrews 4, first part.

SATURDAY, 26th. Returned home by noon. A short distance below our station the train struck an old man who had been on the track, instantly killing him. The train backed and took him in, and his wife, who was with him. The history of the case is about thus: The man's name was Henry Burgart. He had been living with his son-in-law, at Baden, about ten miles above Cumberland, Md. He lately received word from his son, and another son-in-law, residing at a mine near Dawson Station, that they should come to them and they would keep them. Accordingly the family set out for that place. They consisted of the old man and his wife, both above sixty years of age, and a daughter, and her two children.

The daughter carried the money. At Cumberland she lost a ten dollar bill. So she had just money enough to bring the company to this place. But the old lady happend to have a few dollars of her own money, which she gave the daughter to take her and her children to Dawson Station. The conductor of the train refusing to take them without money, the two old folks left the train at Dale City, and set out on foot to finish their journey. About a mile below town the old man stopped on the track to mend his truss, when the train came along, and in the flurry of the moment he was struck by the engine, and instantly killed. An inquest was held, which relieved the engineer of any blame in the matter. The Railroad company took the corpse and the old lady to Dawson Station, by the night freight.

We returned home in time to bid farewell to brethren Myers and Brumbaugh, who went hence to Berlin, where they will labor a few days, and thence to Middle Creek, &c. May the Lord bless their labors.

SUNDAY, 27th. Still rainy; in consequence of which we spent the forenoon at home, knowing that there would be other brethren to serve the meetings.

In the afternoon we attended the Brethren's Sunday School. Had a respectable turn out for such a bad day. A new session has just commenced, and new officers have been elected for the winter session. At some places the Sunday-schools are closed in the fall, but here we take a new start, and intend to keep it up all winter. Why not? We will not want to sit at home all day on Sunday during the winter; then what better place could we have to spend the afternoon, than at the Sunday-school? At some time we may tell more about our school.

In the evening attended our regular preaching, at our town meeting-house. It fell our lot to preach, which we tried to do from the words: "Go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole;" Mark 10: 52. Appeared to have the attention of those who were awake. Those who slept perhaps enjoyed it fully as well; but we prefer to speak to wakeful hearers.

MONDAY, 28th. Attended to office duties, with nothing special to note; and the same may be said of Tuesday.

WEDNESDAY, 30th. Went to Cumberland, Md., in the afternoon, on business, and returned in the evening. On our return home, fell in company with our young friend Scott Campbell, formerly of Martinsburg, but latterly of Westminister College. Md. He is a pleasant companion.

THURSDAY, 31st. This is the last day of October. And that is about all we shall say about it. The boys also reminded us of the fact that it was Hallowe'n, or all Hallow Eve. The Romish Church designed this day to be held in honor of all those saints who had no particular days appointed unto them.

FRIDAY, Nov. 1st. We are glad to enter the new month with prospects of soon being up to our regular time with the issues of our paper. The next number will most likely appear in rapid succession. Be sure you open it carefully.

Keep on the Lookout.

Do you you ask what for? we answer for our Prospectus for 1873; that is for the Blank Lists, whereupon to write the long rows of names of subscribers to the COMPANION for 1873, with their Post-office, County, and State, all written out plainly; and an envelope with our name, or rather the name of our house, and Post-office, County, and State, all plainly printed thereupon. "But" say you all, "Do you mean to send such an outfit in every copy of next issue?" Well, no, not exactly so. We had once thought of doing so; but upon mature deliberation we have concluded to do as we always have done: send the outfit to those who have been acting agent for us, and to each subscriber who gets his paper alone at an office. If we would send to every one, our old agents might conclude that they have not been giving satisfaction and might not act, and we thereby lose a good agent; and we do not wish to commit any such blunders. But we wish it to be fairly understood that we need a great many more agents than we now have on our books, and we will gladly supply them with an outfit. There are territories that have not yet been canvassed at all, where a large number of subscribers can be obtained. And in other places where there are agents, there is room for more to be at work. Can we not enroll several hundred for the approaching volume? We have the outfits and commissions in readiness. Do you say that will be going to considerable trouble, to write to our office, and get an outfit, just to accommodate us? It is going to considerable trouble, but then we do not think it is just for our good. We will pay you for our part of the work, for we allow you one dollar for every ten dollars of money you send us. But then we imagine there is more than money and trouble in this work. It is our impression that we are engaged in a great and noble work, and one in which our readers are all eagerly interested, and are all anxious to participate with us in laboring for the success of that work. And so we think they will be pleased to signify their willingness to take hold of it. But perhaps this much will answer for our present purpose. We only want to have all our readers put upon the look-out for the articles so that they may not unfold the paper carelessly and let them drop out and get lost, or insert their pock-knives or scissors to cut open the pages, and perhaps mar them; or some of the sisters in their great haste to prepare the paper for reading, might run them through their sewing machines, and thus render them useless.

And in case we should fail to send the outfit to any of our old agents, they must by no means think that it was done purposely. Certainly not. Why should we do so foolish a thing, as to slight our friends. If there is any possibility of us doing differently to our friends from the rest of humanity, it would consist in giving them an extra supply. So if any such should be slighted it will be through accident. But we will have something more to say in regard to this matter, when the documents will accompany, for which also keep on the lookout. We have also in view to prepare something especially for subscribers who are not acting agents.—Hope they will be prepared to receive it.

Manuscript Wanted.

We want—in fact we must have it—pages and hundreds of pages of well written manuscript, upon live subjects, of interest to our readers. Our manuscript box is low, very low, and some way must be devised of replenishing it. If we must pay for it, then be it so, for have it we must. Our paper must be continued and we must have something to fill it with. And we have been so used to original matter, that we would consider it a great come down to be compelled to resort to the newspapers for matter for our paper. Brethren and sisters will you come to our help? There is much talent in the Brotherhood that has never been brought into use. We need it all. Why not apply it? As said before, we are willing to pay for it, if need be; but we think there ought to be those among us who are seeking to assist in elevating the standard of our literature, and who have the prosperity of the cause at heart, as well as ourselves. And should there be among such any who are in straitened circumstances,—and we have learned that talent and money do not always go together—we think it right that such should share with us in the advantages arising from the publication of their compositions, and we are willing that they shall do so. So if there be those who would write for money that could not well do so without, they will send in their productions, with their prices marked upon the top of the first sheet. If the price suits us we will forward the price to the writer. If not, it will be cast into the wast box, unless a sufficient amount of stamps accompanies it to pay return postage. Others will forward their contributions as usual. And almost anything that is good, would be good enough just now.

Brethren's Almanac.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1873, is rapidly approaching completion, and we announce ourselves ready to receive orders by the single copy, dozen, or hundred. It will be the best one yet issued; more variety in its reading matter. We do not see how you can well do without it.—We are sure no other almanac can take its place. And its price is within the reach of all. Only 75 cts a dozen, or 10 cts a single copy.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

Some new features in the delay in binding our Tune Book have lately come to light, which may or may not facilitate the business. We have this week received another box of 200 books which have been sent out as they stand in rotation on our order book, and still the list is not supplied. But we are hopeful that in a few weeks at farthest we shall be able to supply all requisitions that may be made upon us. The book is giving pretty general satisfaction, where fairly examined.

Thanks.

Brother Peter L. Swine, of Shirleysburg, Pa., has our thanks for a box of excellent grapes which we received by express. They were good, only somewhat smashed by handling, having been most too ripe for transporting.

The Phrenological Journal for October commands our approval for the variety and quality of its interesting contents. We think the following articles especially worthy a reading. Lowell Mason, the late eminent musician and teacher; The One-Eyed Conducter; Japanese in America, with portraits; Expression, its Anatomy and Philosophy; Preparing for the Cholera; Water, Pure and Impure; Children's Rights; The Last Case of Salem Witchcraft; Life Insurance; Enrico Dandolo; The English Language. In these we certainly have instructive, moral literature in a very attractive dress. Price for the number, 30 cts. S. R. Wells, New York.

Answers to Correspondents.

PHEBE DAVIS: We do not charge for our own mistakes. You have now paid for volume 9.

C. R. SUPLEE: We have no knowledge of having received the notices before. We have given you credit on the C. F. C. for the amount sent.

P. S. NEWCOMER: It is not likely that we shall be able to comply with your request; but if you will correspond with the other brethren named, you can no doubt obtain their services. For their addresses see the Brethren's Almanac.

WILFERD RICE: We did not receive the money; but the book will be sent as soon as we can get on a fresh supply.

DAVID CLEM: All right. We will send the books as soon as convenient.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Report of Travel.

According to previous announcements, I left home on Wendesday Oct. 9th. Took the train at Elizabethtown for Mt. Union, where I was met by a boy, and conveyed to the residence of Eld. J. G. Glock, where I arrived about 7 P. M.

Next morning visited at brother John Baeshoar's, where we took dinner. Afternoon went to place of meeting, being the place where the Annual Meeting was held in 1855, where we were joined by the "COMPANION Family," brother H. R. Holsinger, sister Holsinger, and their daughter Charlotte. The other strange ministers present were H. B. Brumbaugh of the Pilgrim, and Isaac Eby of Perry congregation. After the communion exercises in the evening, I went with Eld. John Spanogle, to the house of his uncle, brother Lutz, where we were kindly entertained, and lodged that night.

Next morning the 11th, went to meeting again for the last time at this place. In the afternoon we separated; some, no doubt, never to meet in this "vale of wo." I, with brother J. B. Garber, who conveyed me, returned again to Mt. Union, to the house of friend Peter Bare, whose wife is a sister, and a daughter of Eld. A. Spanogle, where brother Holsinger and family were brought also.

Next morning 12th, we witnessed the first severe frost of the season. Took the morning train for McVeytown, where we were received, and our wants ministered to at the house of brother A. Myers, a fellow-laborer in the ministry. In the evening, meeting in a school house, close by. Lodged that night at brother Meyers'. 13th being Sunday, we repaired to the Spring Run Meeting-house, where there was meeting appointed in the forenoon and afternoon, and communion in the evening. An election was held here for a deacon, resulting in the choice of Adam Rupert; and brother A. Meyers was advanced to the second degree in the ministry. After the closing of the exercise in the evening, we were taken to, and lodged at the house of Eld. J. R. Hanawalt. At this meeting we were met by brother J. L. Beaver, from Buffalo Valley church, and others, who labored faithfully with us in the Master's cause.

Next day, 14th, after meeting in the forenoon, I was taken by brother Beaver to our much loved young brother Geo. S. Meyers, where we took supper, after which we went to a school house where meeting was appointed. The weather being unfavorable, the attendance was not full. We tried to preach from the words of Pilate, "What is truth?" After meeting, went to the house of our brother Archy Vandyke. Here we were specially made to feel at home, from the fact that all their children, except one, down to the age of ten years, are members of the church. May God's blessing rest upon the brother and sister, as father and mother to be faithful in their calling; and may a special blessing rest upon the dear young brethren and sisters, who, so young, fell in with the overtures of mercy and renounced Satan, and the world with all its follies and vanities. Amen.

Next day, 15th, brother Beaver conveyed me to the house of Eld. Jacob Mohler, of Lewistown congregation, where we took dinner. Went to the Dry Valley meeting-house, where meeting was appointed.

At this meeting, three young brethren, Price, G. S. Meyers and S. J. Swihart, were advanced to the second degree of the ministry. That night was taken to and lodged at the house of our beloved brother Wm. How.

In the morning of the 16th, went to place of meeting, which we left about 9 40 A. M. Took the cars about 10 at Maitland for Lewistown, and from there to Mifflin. There we were met by brother John Zook, who conveyed us to Three Springs M. H., Lost Creek church, where we were met by brethren S. Grabill and Benj. Eby from White Oak, Lancaster Co., and others. After the exercise that day, we were taken to the house of brother A. Baeshoar, where we lodged that night.

After meeting at the same place on the 17th, was taken to the house of Eld. S. Sieber, where I took supper, and at six P. M. took the train for home, on which I again met brother Holsinger on his way to visit C. H. Balsbaugh. Bade farewell at Harrisburg. Reached Elizabethtown at 9. From there traveled on foot for home, 7 miles. As I passed the brethren's houses, all dark and silent, and, no doubt, the inmates asleep and at rest, both mentally and physically, I was made to feel that, while this is their pleasant lot, God's minister, and embassador in Christ's stead, was trudging along the highway, during the silent watches of the night, with no one to commune with but his God. Reached home at 12, midnight. Found all well; thanks be to God, the giver of all good.

At all the places I was, it seemed the brethren and sisters vied with each other, to manifest love, and minister to our wants.

May God reward them for all the good they have done to us, is my prayer.

In all the meetings there was a good turn out, all things considered; and the best of order and attention that could be desired. Brethren pray for us.

Insurance.

As there have of late appeared several articles on this subject, and as none of the plans suggested exactly meets my approbation, I thought I would give my plan in as brief a manner as possible, and should like if the brethren would give it a close investigation before passing it by.

In the first place, I am opposed to calling it Brethren's Insurance Company, as I think the term Brethren too sacred to be applied to an insurance company, and think some other appropriate name will sound better.

But now for the plan. Let the officers of the company consist of a President, Vice President, Secretary Treasurer, and Board of Directors.

Let the President and Vice President be chosen from the Board, and by the Board. And I would suggest, that this Board be chosen from brethren living as close together as possible, in order that they may meet together with as little expense as possible.

Let the Secretary and Treasurer consist of one and the same person, and be chosen by the board, and be under their control.

Then let there be a local agent in each branch of the church throughout the United States, and let all that want to insure apply to the local agent of their branch, and he to the Secretary for them; and let each brother that insures remunerate the local agent for his trouble of sending on for him. And in order to create a fund to meet the losses of the company, let each one pay to the local agent say 25 cents or 50 cents on each one hundred dollars of his risk at the time the application is made, and let this be sent to the Secretary and Treasurer, and receive a policy stating the condition upon which he is insured; and then let the Secretary and Treasurer deposit the money received in some reliable bank, where he can draw interest on it by agreeing not to draw any of it out without giving 30 days notice, and in this manner, the local agent in any branch where a loss occurs can notify the Secretary and Treasurer, and the loss can be adjusted within 60 days from the time it occurs.

The preference to this plan will be easily seen, when we take into consideration the expense in postage and stationary, and the trouble to the Secretaries, and annoyance to the policy holders of making an assessment every time a loss occurs.

When this first assessment is exhausted in paying losses and expenses, let there be another made. If the first assessment be sufficient to pay losses for five years, the brother that insures, one two or three years from the time that the company starts can pay in the next assessment, in proportion to the time that he has been insured. And again, those that have risky property, such as town property, mills, and factories, might pay a larger percentage.

I might give other particulars concerning this plan, but I fear that I have already become too lengthy; so I will submit this, and if any one else has a better plan, or any improvement to make on this, let us have it; and if this is a good one, let it be submitted to the Annual Meeting.

In Memorium of Brother Peter Hollowbush.

The painful necessity, yet pleasing task under such necessity, of either reading the fact of the departure from this world or referring to the life and history of long loved and tried friends, after their departure, is a task of both melancholy and pleasing interest. The reminiscences awakened, the kind act, the encouraging words, the friendly looks, and the pleasing emotions produced by all these, as they passed through a long series of years, many of them making at the time only a temporary impression, now, when the loved ones who produced them have gone down to the cold grave, all have a resurrection in our minds, and are placed before them in consecutive order, and in a most vivid light. The unpleasant,—if ever there was any—is all forgotten in the delightful retrospect of that which was most pleasing, most useful, and which afforded us the most happiness. This very result is only one among the thousand evidendences which prove that true friendship is among, if not superior to, all our earthly blessings. It proves, also, that we never know the value of true friendship, and the worth of real friends, until they have passed beyond our grasp. Then we feel and know from the depth of our hearts, how much we loved them, and the inestimable value of their friendship to our happiness.

The departure from our midst of our late, venerable and venerated brother, Peter Hollowbush, has awakened up in our minds the above and many other kindred reflections. We sometimes think, "Can it be possible, that we have lost another one of our most beloved and tried friends on earth? Oh! shall our souls be no more electrified by the burning words in which this dear brother related his Christian experience? Shall our hearts never melt and dissolve again into tears, at his simple, moving, pathetic relations of the boundless compassion and love of Christ Jesus towards himself and sinners at large?"

We may be permitted to hear others, we may be moved by others, still it will not be the fire, it will not be the pathos, the heart eloquence of brother Hollowbush. Others possessed learning, rhetoric, logic, method, far above his measure; but in the simple eloquence of the heart—the eloquence of fire—the eloquence of feeling—the eloquence of power—power to move others, to make others feel, even in spite of themselves, brother Hollowbush was head and shoulders taller than all his compeers.

But brother Hollowbush has laid down his armour and gone to his reward. He has left a good forgetting world behind; yet, it was made better by his passing through it, and lost, we fear, much by his leaving it. His family weeps over his departure, the church mourns her loss; his ministerial associates sigh in sadness over the breach made in their ranks by the shaft that struck him down; but all these rejoice that such a man once lived to advance the cause of God, to exemplify the Christian character, to preach righteousness to the world, to prove the power of faith in a dying hour; for he died with a Hallelujah upon his lips, perhaps half the sentence in this world and half in paradise. Farewell, dear Peter, we hope to meet again.

For the Companion.

Insurance Companies.

Several articles with the above heading have appeared in the Companion lately, and as I feel interested I will make a few suggestions.

The first article appeared in No 40, by D. H. Plaine. He proposed the mutual plan for a Brethren's insurance Co.

The second in No. 41, by D. F. Wagner. He suggested the stock company's plan. I prefer the mutual plan for the Brethren, for buildings and contents, but would propose to call it "an Undersigning Association of the German Baptist churches."

If the Brethren would have such an association amongst themselves let each arm of the church send a plan to their district meeting, and from the district meeting to the Annual Meeting, or let it be heard through the C. F. C., then the Yearly Meeting may decide.

In love to the Brethren.

More About that Imposter.

Six years ago he came here with his wife, called himself Ellsworth, and said he was a cousin to Col. Ellsworth; but having some relatives living here, and knowing they would tell his real name, he finally said his name was Ellsrode, but commonly spoken Ellsworth. He never studied medicine with Dr. Sturgis, and it is very doubtful whether he ever studied with anybody. There are some members living here who used to know him in Ohio, not as a doctor, neither as a brother, but as "the man who would borrow overcoats, umbrellas, &c., and pawn them for tobacco, medicine, and anything he could get for them."

Beware of him.

Geliebter Bruder Heinrich;

Du werdeſtt dich noch erinnern das ich ſchon mehrmals Anſpruch gemacht habe, für den "Companion" mehr im Deutſchen zu haben, oder ein Theil davon Deutſch ſein ſollt, ſo das die Deutſchen Mitglieder auch ein Nutzen u. Wollte Gott das es fort machen könnte bis er um die hälfte Deutſch werd, damit die Brüder mit recht Grund behalden können, den wir uns zuſchreiben, die Alten Deutſchen Täufer, u. nicht mit ſchreiben, und drucken, und ſprechen, es wieder verleugnen. Wenn wir unſere Pflichten rühmen, als Deutſche und Engliſche Mitglieder, einer dem andere ſeine Laſt zu tragen, ſo kann es vollbracht werden. Es iſt noch Zeit um es wieder zu verſuchen bis Neujahr.

Nun will ich eine Tauf-übung berichten, die vollzogen iſt worten, den 29tn des letzten Septembers, durch den Bruder John Zug. It has been discovered that the Colorado bugs are mixed in among the white beans after they are threshed; and it is said that this bug is poisonous, so it is necessary to pick these beans over carefully, and wash them in hot water before boiling.

A heavy frost, on the morning of the 15th inst. put an end to the growing of vegetables for this season. It is very unusual to have a frost so early. Last year cotton, potatoes, &c., were growing until the 27th of November. The cotton crop especially has been considerably reduced by the early frost this season.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

At the residence of Joel Flory, near Dayton, Rockingham county, Va., October 6th, sister MARY FLORY, wife of brother Samuel Flory, Keokuk county, Iowa, aged 47 years, 5 months and 21 days. Disease, inflammation of the bowels. She, with her husband, left their home and children in Iowa, about two months previous, to visit their old homestead, kindred, and friends, in Augusta and Rockingham counties, Va. Having enjoyed their visit very much, they were expecting in a few days to return home, when sickness seized her body, and in a few days of suffering, which she bore with Christian fortitude, not murmuring or lamenting about home or earth or her dear children so far away,—only the desire of being in that home of the blest,—She fell asleep in Jesus. All who knew the departed mourn, but not as those who have no hope, but feel sure she has only gone home to God, and our loss is her gain. Oh, that all of us might set our house in order, so that, let us die where we may, whether at home or abroad, we can have the assurance that Jesus is our friend, that all will be well with us. Her remains were interred in the burying-ground near the Brick church, in Augusta county, Va., where the funeral services were attended to by brother Solomon Garber and others, to a large concourse of mourning kindred and sympathizing friends. Shortly after the sad occurrence, the almost broken hearted husband left for his home in Iowa, there to meet his now motherless children, who were so anxiously awaiting the return of their dear father and mother. But ah, the tyrant, death, had taken one of their dear ones. Yes, she had found another home, and some other dear children that had gone to that heavenly home some time before their mother. My pen cannot describe the scene, when the news came to the children that their mother was dead. Oh, the pangs of sorrow, the unbroken cries of mourning love—for their parent! We know and feel the stroke is hard, but we must bow to the will of him who ruleth all things. It is he and he alone that can soothe the broken spirit—the sorrowing soul. Then let us be submissive to his will at all times, and under every affliction. As the children, family connections, &c., in Iowa, were deprived of the benefit of the former funeral services, it was thought good to have a funeral attended to in Iowa; consequently, on Sunday the 13th of October the occasion was improved at the Brethren's meeting-house by brother C. Long and others, to a very large crowd of sorrowing kindred and sorrowing friends, from the 14th chapter and 14th verse of the book of Job.

Oct. 8th, DAVID FRANKLIN GARBER, son of brother Abram and sister——Garber, and grand-son of David Garber, dec'd, aged 13 years and some months. Disease, Brain Fever. Occasion improved by brother D. M. Truby, followed by friend Smooker, in German.

In the Elk Lick branch, Somerset county, Penn'a., Oct. 30, ADA ALICE BERKLEY, infant daughter of brother Ezra Berkley, aged 8 months and 23 days. Text selected by the parent Matth. 19 : 14.

C. G. LINT.

In the Lower Deer Creek church, Oct. 22d, brother JAMES MC FADDEN, aged 56 years, 5 months and 18 days. Disease, Lung Fever. He was confined to his bed but a few days. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. Isaac Eikenbery and others, from 1st Thes. 4 : 13, 14.

R. YOUNG.

On the 15th of Oct., in the Pipe Creek church, Carroll county, Maryland, sister REBECCA REESE, aged 68 years, 11 months and 18 days. Our departed sister lived in widowhood many years, the last 19 of which she was paralyzed, and for the latter ten years not able to walk. Otherwise she had good health, but was waiting for her change. She frequently conversed upon the subject of death, and with her, to die, we believe was gain. On 17th her remains were interred in the burying-ground attached to the Meadow branch meeting-house. Funeral preached by the Brethren. "For me to die is gain."

EPHRAIM W. STONER.

In the Dry Creek congregation, Linn Co., Iowa, Oct 20th Elder JACOB O. WATTERS, aged 69 years, 3 months and 26 days. He emigrated in the year 1855, from Cambria Co., Pa. to his present home in Iowa. In 1856 he organized the Brethren church in Linn county, Iowa. He was ever faithful to his calling, as a minister and Elder, to the best of his ability. His seat was seldom vacant. In cold and heat, wet or dry he was at his post. The day before he died he worked hard, eat a hearty supper, then soon retired and fell asleep, and died without a struggle; his wife sleeping by his side at the same time, and not aware of his death. In the morning after day light his wife arose and built a fire, and attended to house work for some time, and then returned to the door of his bed-room and called, "Pap!" But no answer. Then she went to his bed and touched his arm which he had folded on his breast, and to her surprise his arm was stiff and cold. Only one of his daughters was at home at the time, Oh, what lamentation and weeping, and no one to comfort them. Brother Watters has two sons living, both deacons in the church, and five daughters all of the same fraternity. May his example never be forgotten by his children. "Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and your children." Funeral services by the Brethren, from Rev. 14: 13.

THOS. G. SNYDER.

In the Philadelphia church, June 23d, suddenly of cholera infantum, ROBIE EVANS, infant son of Robert I. and Mary S. Evans, aged 7 months and 12 days. Interment at Germantown. Funeral services by C. Custer.

Also in the Green Tree church, Montgomery county, Oct. 18th, after three months suffering and pain, fell asleep in Jesus TILLIEN M. SUPLEE, only daughter of brother John R. and sister Sallie D. Suplee, aged 7 months and 11 days. Both were grandchildren of Samuel and Catharine R. Suplee. Funeral occasion improved by Eld. John H. Umstead. C. R. SUPLEE.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion, Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

A Consolation.

How well it is that Jesus said,
"Let little children come to me."
Now all the children, when they die,
Go to him, and his glory see.

They go to an eternal home,
In golden mansions bright and fair,
Where children see their Savior shine,
And his supernal blessings share.

It seems to break our hearts at first
To see our darling children die;
But then again we should rejoice
That they are angels in the sky.

It only now remains for us,
Our own salvation to prepare;
That we eventually may
Be happy with our children there.

And we, if we like children are,
Shall also see him as he is,
And be like him, the morning star,
Eternally in joy and peace.

What must we Do to be Saved?

This is a very important question, and should be asked by each and every one that has come to the years of understanding. Time and space will not permit me to express my sentiments upon the subject above mentioned, but I will proceed to the import of the question. The end proposed in it is, salvation. The inquirer would know what he must do to be saved. What is it to be saved? It is to be delivered from sin and suffering, to be made holy and happy, to be recovered from the condemnation and corruption brought upon the soul by transgression, to be restored to the favor and image of God. It includes being pardoned, justified, adopted, and made an heir of God, as well as being renewed and sanctified. Salvation comprehends both grace and glory; it commences in time, it is continued through eternity. Peace that passeth understanding, hope that maketh not ashamed, joy unspeakable and full of glory, and everlasting consolation belong to this salvation. These begin to be realized here; and beyond the grave, a crown unfading, a throne exalted, a kingdom that can not be moved, and an inheritance incorruptable and undefiled, are reserved for the happy and glorified subject for this salvation. He shall no more suffer, weep, sin, or die. And the positive good that God has prepared for him, sense cannot discern, imagination cannot conceive; it is an exceeding and an eternal weight of glory. Now the sinner asks what he must do in order to gain this salvation. Before I tell him what he must do to be saved, let me tell him what others have done that he might be saved. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." His Son, whom his Father spared not, though he was his only begotten and well beloved, the Lord Jesus, though rich, became poor for our sakes, took upon himself the form of a servant, humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Yes, for us he condescended and came down, lived in earthly circumstances, moved in human society, was subject to our ills, was despised, wept, bled and died. This is what he did for our sakes, and in our stead. For the same object he is now doing in heaven, and this, God in providence is ever doing, angels are waiting to do, men are doing, ministers preaching, and Christians praying. But in all this the sinner must come to Jesus, confessing his sins and believe that "He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him." Now, dear sinner, do you ask how you are to believe? Faith is a moral exercise: 'With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." Do you ask how you may know them? Faith works by love. The heart is purified by faith, and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. These are among the achievements. It is a holy and heroic principle. Read a record of its exploit in Hebrews 11th Read the Bible and learn what is recorded therein, and "If you know the things that are on record, happy are ye if ye do them." Believe on Christ and be saved. It is a present duty; believe while it is your privilege. Not believing, you remain not saved; and "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Not saved, and soon the harvest will be past, the summer ended, and you not saved! Oh sinner, act immediately, and with thy might! Be instant, be earnest! The Savior looks toward thee, he comes after thee, his arms are extended, his heart is open. By the love that was stronger than death he pleads with thee to let him save thee. But perhaps you say, I hear all this, and I approve it, and I do make the attempt to believe, but it is all in vain, I experience no relief, no change. Renew the attempt, there is no alternative, there is no second thing you are to be directed to do, in case the first does not succeed. But may I not pray, and read my Bible, and break off my evil habits, and attend on the means of grace? Most assuredly you may, and if you are in earnest, you will do it. Salvation includes a work for you. Read about it, think about it. Jesus died for you and me. In his name, we must come, for there is no other name under Heaven whereby we can be saved. And even remember that that which is to be done by you is more than reading about the work of the Spirit. Propitiation was the work of Christ. Regeneration is the work of the Spirit; to repent and believe is thine. "Study to do thine own business,' and then thou shalt not only have to praise Christ for having done his work, but thou shalt bless the Spirit too, for having accomplished his work; to the divine Trinity, "Father, Son and Holy Ghost," shall be due, and shall be rendered by thee, the glad subject of the salvation, and by the general assembly of the redeemed, and by the whole fraternity of angels, the praise, all the praise, and the praise for ever, that thou art saved.

Professional Morality.

BY M. STONE, D. D.

Every department of human activity has its own peculiar temptations, some more, some less, probably, though the difference, both as to number and power, is not so great as many suppose.

The sins that characterize one employment may be much more conspicuous and hurtful to others, and therefore may be much better known, while those peculiar to another may be out of view more, and be more hurtful to self, or they may be violations of obligations to God, hardly known to any but to him who commits them, or to God.

It is very common for persons who only see the outside of ministerial life to suppose that of all professions, or employments, the ministry is freest from temptation and most conducive to devotion, and purity of heart and life. They suppose that because the daily duties of the minister have to do with the study and interpretation of the Scriptures, prayer, religious conversation, reading upon religious topics, visits to the sick and dying, attending funerals, etc., he must therefore always be in a religious frame of mind; and because practice in religious services renders them familiar and natural, they seem to be spontaneous and spiritual. Readiness and ease are taken for spiritual life. There is, probably, no room for doubt that the ministers, as a class, live up to a higher standard than any other class, morally; are much less frequently detected in violations of civil and social law; so rarely that when one is detected it obtains very great notoriery, is in the mouth of everybody, and creates more excitement than the detection of several of any other profession. And yet this outward conformity to virtuous practices can not always be set down to the credit of piety or superior virtue, but often to the constraining force of his circumstances. Regard for the fitness of things, for congruities, no doubt have much to do in producing outward ministerial life, as surroundings in other professions have in producing what seems to be much less suitable to devotion. Throw a minister into business circles, let him be subjected to all the rough aspects of human nature that men in the selfish business relations have to meet, a while, and see if his character does not contract a taint that will lower him in the estimation of his neighbors. Let him be placed in those countries where ministers are not expected to be more holy than their neighbors, and see if he will in all respects retain the punctiliousness that had characterized him in our refined, Christian communities. The sins of ministers are rarely of the showy, conspicuous kind, but they may, nevertheless, be sins grievous in the sight of God. The temptations of ministers may be in their nature quite peculiar to their sphere, so much so as to be very imperfectly appreciated by others, and yet their sins may be quite as offensive in the sight of God.

It may be thought that such sins as we have intimated as peculiar to ministers would hardly come into a discussion of moralities. The propriety of classing them among immoralities depends very much upon the definition we shall adopt for morality. The Decalogue is a moral law. All obedience to the moral law is morality. It may be more—it may be piety. It is mere morality when it is only an outward community, and piety when, besides being externally right, it results from a hearty, affectionate regard to the will of the Lawgiver. Now if God cannot discriminate any better than we can, as to the impulses from which our obedience springs, then he may mistake mere morality for piety, and be satisfied with it.

But if "he looketh to the heart," then what the world call moralities may be grievous offenses in the sight of God, because they lack all that could possibly make them acceptable in his sight. We restrict the application of the term morality to the outward, because we can rarely penetrate beyond the outward. We, however, measure praise, or blame, to all men, according to what we can conceive to be the inward, the intention, the feelling, the like to what constitutes piety. Then, if service from the heart is what God requires, and alone what can be acceptable, and if the peculiar sphere of duty among ministers is such as to produce a tendency to a mere treadmill obedience, outward religion, professional piety, then they mock and offend God as any other class of men. If there be any minister who has never detected in himself mere professional piety, that is, the performance of religious services, all right, so far as form is concerned—doctrinally sound, proper, serious, suitable, that could claim very little else—he is surely a very happy man, and has escaped one of the great dangers to which ministers are liable, and one of the greatest causes of barrenness known to his profession. His sermons may be models as to form, doctrine, appropriateness and delivery, and yet be an offense to God, for want of the spirit and soul of pious feeling. The minister may be a faithful student, may prepare his sermons with great care, may make them scriptural, and they may be ineffective nevertheless, because they may have the one fatal defect. The minister may be liable to avarice, lust, ambition, vanity, indolence or frivolity, and he may fall by either, but it is probable that God sees more ministers fail from mere professional piety than from any other cause, and probably from all others together: that is, from being content to keep up the habit of praying, preaching, visiting, and conversing in a pious way, without due attention to his own spiritual state. Many a minister who enjoys a high reputation is no doubt in a state of grievous backsliding in the sight of God, in heart. It is so much easier to slide into a pious habit, and pray, read, talk or preach, professionally, than bravely to grapple with our vile affections, and gain a victory over them, and maintain earnest, spiritual life in the soul. It is so much easier to preach the Christology of the schools than to keep ourselves in a condition to hold forth the living Christ, personally apprehended in the Lord.

It was not the design of these articles exhaustively to discuss the morality of the four classes named in these articles, nor to confine the term morality to the common definition, but rather to consider the peculiar dangerous tendencies of these several spheres of effort, with a view to greater caution and circumspection, and with the hope that others would take up some or all of these topics, and push on these inquiries, and make suggestions of remedies. Each of these professions has a class of temptations peculiar to its self, and there is probably very little difference between them as to the possibility of living a godly, righteous and sober life, though some think there is a vast difference. The temptations of each are very insidious, and very likely to be called by a better name than they deserve. Treachery to truth and moral principle in one of them is likely to be called "true to my client," "faithful to my oath." Concealment of crime in another may pass for a "sacrifice to peace." In another zeal for study, prompted by ambition, may take the place of devotion and spirituality, and the politician may lie and slander, from pure patriotism, to defeat a dangerous party and promote the success of a better one, as he thinks. Let each look well to the avenues of evil that open out of his path.—A. C. Review.

Close Communion.

The Subject of Close Communion has been before the public for a long time. Several brethren have given attention to it and have reasoned very well. However, but little scriptural authority has been produced.—The reason no doubt is, because there is but one text of scripture directly to the point on this question. We will proceed at once, stating the text in connection with a few thoughts upon the same. Turn to Heb.: 10. Here we have it in these words, "We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat which serve the taberacle." This text, in my opinion, comprehends as much and perhaps more than any other in the Epistolary writings. The "altar" represents the Bread and Wine; i. e. the communion. The "Tabernacle" here referred to represents man's temporal body; see 2 Cor. 5: 8: and 2 Pet. 1:

13, 14. Serving the "Tabernacle" implies that a man may become a servant to his own body. 1st. It may consist in adorning the body, in eating or drinking. It may consist even in labor—laboring to excess for the purpose of accumulating wealth.

2 Serving the "Tabernacle" in its most extensive sense consists in performing the "Works of the flesh."—This includes very much. Paul in Gal. 5: 19-21 gave a catalogue of them, and concludes by stating; "And such like." Now let us reason together a little. Supposing we would extend the hand of fellowship to all, or invite all professors of religion to participate with us in the communion; Among them are such who do not believe in the Salutation, the "Kiss," nor "Feetwashing," which we deem essential. Others again, have no faith in the "Supper," and consider it altogether out of place. Now if we should all mingle together thus, what disorder and confusion would ensue. We count that in so doing we would even commit sin, "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Rom. 14: 23. Our friendly reader will please bear in mind that beside all this we believe that a thorough examination should take place in the mind of every member of the body of Christ before partaking of the sacred emblems. Members are exhorted to this, and if by examination they ascertain that there is enmity in their hearts, or ill will against any of their fellow members, they should by no means participate in the "Communion," lest they "eat and drink to themselves damnation." 1st Cor. 11: 29. Yea, so pointed was the Savior on this subject that if by examination it be brought to our remembrance that there is one member who even has aught against us he commands us to withdraw; "Go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother." Mat. 5: 23, 24. Why then should it be thought uncharitable in us, when we do not invite all religious professors, since our own members are admonished to withdraw when not having complied with all the requirements of the Savior? Professors of religion who do not believe in keeping the ordinances instituted by the great "Teacher," should be reminded that they have not yet "obeyed that form of doctrine" which was delivered unto us." Rom. 6: 17 Not even the first principles of the oracles of God; Heb. 7: 1. And should we invite such to participate with us, and should they feel disposed to partake it would be rather to their destruction, than to their edification.

Fraternally yours,
JACOB BAHR.

"Stand Fast."

It is a question of the utmost importance, to every child of God who earnestly desires to be just what the Lord would have him to be, "How can I stand fast?" It is very humiliating to find that, with all our watchfulness, all our earnest determination to walk unblamably in the narrow way, our inward life with Christ is so vacillating and unsatisfactroy. We feel, when we approach the unconverted, so completely shorn of strength on account of our heart-wanderings from Christ, such a lack of power, as almost entirely discourages us from attempting to lead them to the blessed Jesus.

Many fail to "stand fast," because they do not obey the apostle's injunction, to "Put on the whole armor of God." They have been careful about their "girdle," their "breastplate," and their "helmet," and their success has proven that they were well "shod," while the skill with which they wielded their "sword," showed constant practice and faithfulness in drill. But when they come to pick up their "shield," they have found it entirely too small to cover their person, and themselves exceedingly slow and clumsy in its use. Perhaps the great apostle himself had failed at one time in that point, for we read of his crying out, "Oh, wretched man that I am;" and looking back to that bitter, painful experience, he urges upon the Ephesians to "put on the whole armor,"—"above all," says he, "taking the shield of faith." Why, Paul? Why so much more importance attached to this part of the armor than to the others? Because it is the only thing that will make you "able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." And this will certainly do it, no matter how unerring the aim, no matter how unexpected the assault.

Perhaps it is a little dart, just enough to ruffle your temper, and cause you to speak unadvisedly with your lips. Never mind. That shield will catch it, and you will "stand fast," notwithstanding. Perhaps it is a little dart intended to stir up selfishness, or pride, or ambition, just enough to cause a separation between you and Christ. You have all along known which one was your weak point, and the enemy of your soul knows too, and there is where he will aim his fiery dart. But, though he propel it with as much skill as the Benjamite displayed with his sling, that shield will catch and quench it.

We often hear expressions like these: "My faith is very weak, and faith is the gift of God; therefore I cannot believe until he gives me faith." But the apostle says, "Take it." It is all provided in the great armory, "without money and without price." "Take it." And if you would "stand fast" all the time, "watch and pray;" but be sure and watch Jesus, and let him watch the enemy, and the danger. If we keep our eye on him, while we go into the harvest field, to bring in sheaves with both hands, the result will be that we shall "stand fast," "looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." "Therefore, brethren, dearly beloved, stand fast in the Lord.—National Baptist.

Five Steps to the Gallows.

A man had committed murder, was tried, found guilty, and condemned to be hanged. A few days before his execution, upon the walls of his prison he drew a gallows with five steps leading up to it.

On the first step he wrote, Disobedience to parents.

On the second step, Sabbath Breaking.

On the third step, Gambling and Drunkenness.

On the fourth step, Murder.

Boys, heed the lesson; avoid these four steps that you may never stand convicted on the fifth, which is the fatal platform.

Temperance and Christianity have a wonderful power in adorning people, or improving their appearance. It gives them "a meek and quiet spirit;" and this the Bible calls an "ornament which is in the sight of God of great price." Temperance and religion make the eye look brighter, the complexion clearer, the smile sweeter, the voice softer, and everything about our person better-looking than it otherwise would be.

Grandmother's Work.

Up in the garret the grandmother sits,
Under the rafters dark and low,
Sorting over the faded bits
Of woolen and silk and calico;
And the children wonder, as peeping in
They watch the old lady her task begin,
Why the aged hands, so wrinkled and thin,
Should tremble and be so slow.

Run away, ye careless ones, to your play!
Let her muse for awhile alone!
These faded remnants, once bright and gay
Have a history—every one;
And this is the reason the grand-dame sighs,
And the blinding tears, that unbidden rise,
She paused to wipe from those faded eyes
Whose weeping she thought was done.

This silk, whose color she scarce can tell,
Laid away with such pride and care,
Was the bridal robe–she remembers well–
Of her darling so pure and fair;
And she hastily folds it out of sight,
For she knows full well, in that land of light,
Unfading and spotless, clean and white,
Are the garments the ransomed wear.

And these tiny shreds of old, soft lace,
Which the years have turned so gray
How they bring before her the baby face
That within those ruffles lay!
And her heart leaps over the days that remain,
Till she clasps in her arms her babe again
While her withered heart feels a yearning pain,
For the little one called away.

And now she has found a scrap of blue,
And she brushes away a tear
As she thinks of her soldier-son so true
To his country—to her so dear;
A bit of blue her brave boy wore
When he said "good-bye" at the cottage door.
She listens in vain, on the oaken floor,
For the footsteps she loved to hear.

And thus she labors, and thinks & dreams,
While memories fast arise,
Till the fading light of evening seems
To come with swift surprise;
And the children that night, in the chimney nook,
Looking up at length from their picture book,
See the folded hands and the shadowy look
Of tears in her kindly eyes.

"Sowing Wild Oats."

BY WILLIAM LAMSON, D. D.

There are many sayings current which have been handed down from generation to generation, some of which are most pernicious in their influence. Among these latter phrases may be classed that common one, "He is sowing his wild oats." It is an apologetic phrase. Here is a young man, wild, reckless, mischievous; and his partial friends say of him, "He is only sowing his wild oats," by which they mean that he is working off his exuberant wickedness, and that when that is done he will settle down to be a sober, industrious, useful citizen.—The idea is conveyed that such a youth has the promise in it of a noble manhood, that it is indeed richer in promise than that of him whose life is correct and exemplary. Many a fond father, who has thought and said this of his son, has had occasion in later years to weep unavailing tears over the failure of his predictions.

Youth is the seed-time of manhood, and the law is that whatsoever one soweth then, that shall he also reap. The harvest will be like the seed.—That is the law in the natural world. We all act upon it. Every farmer has believed in it and acted upon it since the days of Adam. No one ever sowed turnip seed expecting to reap wheat. But in morals an expectation as unreasonable and absurd as that is often met with. Of many a young man to-day whose life is irregular, if not flagrantly criminal, fond friends are saying: "O he is only sowing his wild oats." Sowing his wild oats, indeed, but not in the sense intended, not in the sense of burying them; but sowing them as the terrible seed of a more terrible harvest.—It is false, parents, that such a youth has rich promise in it. It is false, young man, that you can transgress great moral laws and form vicious habits, and arriving at manhood cast them off as easily as you can change your dress. The law is that you will reap in manhood what you sow in youth, that and not something else.

Every man who has passed the meridian of life finds himself at times musing on the past, running back to his early years and surrounding himself with the scenes and associates of those early years. In such a review he will not fail to see the working of the law of which I have spoken.—Those associates have in nearly every case, if not in every one, fulfilled their early promise. The harvest has been like the seed. The child was the father of the man. Among my early associates was one with whom I was intimate. We attended the same school, sat on the same form, recited the same lessons, and after leaving school engaged in the same occupation. We grew up together. There was this difference between us,—he was the child of wealth,—I of poverty. But he was just one of those free, generous, profane, wine-drinking young men of whom it is said, They are sowing their wild oats. Well, not to prolong the story, a few weeks since, on a visit to my native village, I passed over the ground over which we had often passed in company, saw his father's house where he had often sat at the same table, and could not help recalling him and thinking of his sad end. His habits grew with his years and strengthened with his strength. His course of dissipation and extravagance exhausted his resources. He must have money, and one night, at midnight he resolved to break into the village bank, and was shot dead by the watchman within sight of his father's door. This was the harvest of the seed early sown.

But how when one whose early years have been worthless or vicious, is afterwards met, subdued, and changed by the regenerating grace of God? Take Augustine, St. Augustine as he is called, one of the most saintly men, one of the most eloquent preachers, and one of the most honored bishops of the Latin Church.—Perhaps no name in any church is held in higher and more merited esteem. And yet if we credit his own confessions, his youth was profligate and vicious in the extreme, he was the companion of the lewd and profane, and he gave himself up to every indulgence to which his depraved tastes inclined him. Now the question occurs, and it is a fair one, what became of the law of seed and harvest, of sowing and reaping in the case of Augustine and in other similar cases? Was Augustine, the devout, earnest, self-denying Christian, the eloquent preacher, the profound theologian, the learned author, was he the legitimate harvest of the youthful Augustine? Does not his course justify the saying, He sowed his wild oats? that is, worked off his exuberant wickedness and thus became the sober, devout, spiritual man that he was? No! emphatically no! this manhood was not the product of his youth. A new law, a supernatural law, came in, arrested the natural law, and the result was a new man. God met him and created him anew by his mighty power. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. And did this change come as a consequence of his early recklessness and dissipation? No, it came by the action of another law, the law of prayer. The mother of Augustine, the saintly Monica, ceased not to pray for her wayward son, never giving him up, never despairing, and her prayers, like those of the Syrophenician mother, though for a while apparently unheeded, at length prevailed. The answer came in the regenerating grace that made of that wicked son a new man, kindling in him a glorious light in the church of God, a light still shining.

We say, then, and this is the point, that the law is that manhood and old age are the harvest of seed sown in youth, that what is sown, and not something else, is reaped. This is the law. If there are miracles of grace by which this law is in some striking cases arrested, a new law acts; it does not disprove the existence of the original law. That is the law on which we are to act, on which parents and guardians are to build their expectations, and not on the baseless saying that the wild, dissipated, worthless youth is sowing his wild oats. The greater number of those who sowed their wild oats in their early years are not in the pulpits of the land, nor in the churches of Christ, but they are in prison cells, or are filling unhonored graves.

Ye Who are Young, Come.

SELECTED BY E. MEYERS.

Youthful readers, be persuaded to give your early years to God! There is a special promise for you, "Those that seek me early shall find me." Perhaps you think, "I am too young to be religious yet; let me enjoy the world a little; I have plenty of time before me." Too young to be religious? But you are not too young to sin, nor too young to die, nor too young to be cast into hell? You may not live to reach manhood, much less old age. Multitudes die as young as you. If you enter a burial ground, how many of the graves are those of young people! Death may be even now preparing to strike you. Oh, then come at once to Jesus! You greatly err if you think religion will make you gloomy: it alone can render you truly happy. Many young people have tried it, who will tell you that the pleasures of piety are far better than all the delights of sin and vanity. You will find that this is true, if you come to Jesus. Is it likely he will let his followers be less happy than the servants of the world? Besides, how can you dare to live a day longer rejecting him? He commands us at once to believe and obey him. Every day we put off repentance we commit a fresh act of rebellion, and "heap up wrath against the day of wrath!" You say you will repent when you are old. But we need the Spirit of God to help us to repent; and if you say, "While I am young I will serve Satan, and not till I am near death will I turn to God," do you think God will give you his Holy Spirit at all? Is not this to quench the Spirit? Very few are converted when old. If you come not to Jesus when young, it is not likely you will come at all. Habits will fasten strong chains around you, which will be harder to burst asunder. Every day while you wait, Satan works. He is busy tying knots. You are his prisoner, and he is making the cords which bind you more secure. Whenever you sin, he ties another knot. Every impression you smother, every hours delay, add a few knots. If you do not escape now, how can you expect to break loose, when you are weaker, and your fetters stronger? Oh, then, "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth!" Come at once to Jesus, if you wish to come at all! He will be your guide amid the snares, your comfort amid the sorrow, your guardian amid the dangers of life! Lose not for one day the privilege of possessing such a friend! Say from this moment, "My Father, thou art the guide of my youth."

Who are They.

"Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven." Matthew, 5: 19.

These persons are teachers; and if teachers, preachers; and if preachers, then who are they? Are they not those who tell the people that Christ never intended such a low thing as feet-washing to be observed as a church ordinance, but that he only washed his disciples feet to show us that he was humble? Now I surely think that every person that ever read or knows anything about Christ, knows that his whole life was a meek and humble one, without his performing this act to show us the same.—But I should think that we are the ones, with our naturally high minds and haughty dispositions, that should show our Savior, that we are willing to humble ourselves and obey all his commands, no matter what they be. Are those persons not also they who teach the people to bring the infants, and have them sprinkled; that this infant baptism must come in and take the place of circumcision, telling them, also, that it looks shameful to see persons going into the water to be baptized by immersion? Now do those persons for one moment suppose that the Lord Jesus would do any act that we should blush to perform? Did not his Father say he was well pleased? And is it not enough for us to know that we please God, no matter how much we displease the world? Are those persons not also they who teach the people to believe that the Lord's supper, we observe, is the Jewish passover and should not be observed, and that a small portion of bread and wine is all that is necessary? that the reason they take this in the morning is it is more convenient? Now, after reading the lives of the apostles, of their sufferings and trials, and of the extreme suffering of our Savior, I say, shame to any person that would plead inconvenience! In conclusion, if these are not the persons mentioned in this portion of scripture, then who are they?

Death of Charles XV., of Sweden.

Charles XV. (Louis Eugene), King of Sweden and Norway, died at Malmo, a seaport town of Sweden, whither he had gone for rest and recuperation.

He was the son of Oscar I. and the grandson of Bernadotte, Prince of Ponte Borvo. Bernadotte was one of the most celebrated of the First Napoleon's Generals, and it was at the dictation of the French Emperor that in 1810, he was elected Crown Prince of Sweden, the throne of which nation he ascended in 1818 as Charles XIV. Oscar I. came to the throne on the death of his father, in 1844, and reigned with great justice and ability until his death, in 1859.—Charles Louis Eugene was born on the 3rd day of May, 1826. His mother was a daughter of Prince Eugene Beauharnais, Duke of Leuchtenburg, and he was therefore a cousin of ex-Emperor Napoleon III. On June 19, 1850, he was married to the Princes Wilhelmina of Orange, a grand-daughter of the late Frederic William III., of Prussia, a daughter of William Frederick, Prince of the Netherlands, and a first cousin of King William III., of Holland. In 1857 the late King was appointed regent of the kingdom in consequence of the protracted illness of his father, whom he finally succeeded on the throne on the 8th of July, 1859. King of two nations, he was crowned at Stockholm on the anniversary of his birth, May 3, 1860, and Drotheim on Aug. 5 of the same year.

Baptism the Door into the Church.

We said in a former article that we would show, that, according to the teachings of the apostles, baptism is the door into the church of Christ, or the sheep fold. The Savior told his apostles to tarry at Jerusalem till they were "endued with power from on high." The time had fully come, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. They were now under the influence of the Spirit of God; and we must conclude, that if ever poor, sinful man was qualified to speak the word of the Lord, Peter certainly was, and that he spoke nothing but the word of the Lord. Now, what was the answer he gave to those that made the inquiry, "Men and brethren what shall we do?" Did he tell them to pray and God would hear them by and by, and forgive their sins? Why, my dear reader, they were praying, when they saw the wonderful works of God. The apostles were filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Now there were at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation. The multitude came together, and were confounded, because every man heard them speak in his own language. They were amazed, and marvelled, saying, "Behold! are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own town wherein we were born? Acts 2: 4—8. When these Jews saw what they had done, after Peter's preaching to them, that this same Jesus, who is Lord and Christ, they had taken by their wicked hands and had crucified, they had faith in Peter's preaching; they were satisfied that this was the true Messiah, which was to come to save his people from their sins, that they had stained their hands with the blood of the Son of God, and they were made to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Now they realized what they had done; they felt that great load of sin which was upon them. They had faith. If our friends and neighbors could but have such faith as these Jews had, who were willing to hear the word of the Lord!

But it is a prevalent doctrine in the world, that, having faith in the Lord, this and praying is all that is required of us. Let us see what the apostle Peter's answer was to the Jews. He was under the influence of the Holy Spirit of God—the right man to give the right answer. What did he say to them? Did he tell them just to have faith in God, and to pray, and that Heaven would be theirs forever? Did he set out a mourner's bench? No, he did not; neither do we think any of the apostles ever did. But Peter's answer to those inquiring souls was, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call;" Acts 38: 49. Show me the promise of the forgiveness of our sins, in this chapter, before baptism. If there was any, would not Peter have told us? Certainly he would.

We are often cited to the conversion of Carnelius, recorded in the tenth chapter of Acts of the Apostles. They say, "Was not there a baptizing of the Holy Ghost before water baptism?" We answer, we must understand the Scriptures in the true light. Did not God ever work by means? We will look back to the time when Jesus came into the world. Was he not rejected by his people, the Jews, the chosen people of God? He was not received by them to be the true Messiah, and in order to have them believe, did he not do many miracles? Did he not unstop the ears of the deaf, and open the eyes of the blind? He even raised the dead. He did all this that they might believe. Yet we see that many did not receive him; and some were willing even to put him to death. Peter was a Jew, brought up under the law, and was very zealous, and as the Jews would not even eat with the Gentiles, it was necessary to convince Peter that there was no difference between Jews and Gentiles, but that every one that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted by him. Now there were certain animals, which the Jews, under their law, were forbidden to eat. While Peter was upon the housetop praying, he fell into a trance, and he was very hungry and fain would have eaten. And he saw heaven open, "and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth, wherein were all manner of four footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill and eat. But Peter said, Not so, Lord, for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean. This was done thrice; and the vessel was received up again into heaven. Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate." We see in the 19th and 20th verses, that the Spirit of the Lord told him to go, doubting nothing, for the Lord had sent them. Peter willing to be obedient to the word of the Lord, went. Then after Peter had come to the house of Cornelius, Cornelius fell down before Peter and worshipped him. But Peter took him up, saying, "Stand up; I myself also am a man." Peter says, to them in the 28th verse, "Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or to come unto one of another nation; but God has showed me that I should not call any man common or unclean." The Savior says in the 10th chapter of John, speaking, undoubtedly, of the Gentiles, in the 16th verse, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring in and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." Now, my dear reader, do not try to confine the entire scripture to the conversion of Cornelius; it does not help you for it was done only to show Peter or those with him that there was no difference between Jew and Gentile, but that whosoever "believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In the 3rd verse we read, "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, of a truth I perceive that God is no respector of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." This convinced Peter that the time had come that high and low, rich and poor, white and black, noble and ignoble, had free access to the throne of grace, if they would lay hold of the work. Then in the 47th verse he asks, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" "Then he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord."

Now let us see something about the conversion of Saul of Tarsus. This man too was very zealous toward God. We find him binding men and women hand and foot to bring them to Jerusalem to be punished. But while on his way to Damascus, he was struck down with a light from heaven, and a voice came unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" And he answered, "Who art thou Lord." The answer was, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecuted Now Saul asked the Lord what he should do. What did he tell him to do? Did he say to Saul, "Pray on, just have a little more faith and I will by and by forgive you?" We say, No! What then? Why not forgive Saul's sins right then? Because Jesus tells us he is the way: "I have left my will with you, and have sealed it with my blood. Now, Saul, I have yonder in Damascus one of my executors, who is a teacher of my will, he can tell thee what thou must do." Here we have a man that was praying and fasting, and was blind. He was three days and three nights in this condition. When Ananias expounded unto him the way of the Lord, there fell from his eyes scales, and he received sight forthwith, he arose and was baptized; Acts 9: 18. In the 22 chapter, 16th verse Ananias says, unto him, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Do we see a mourners bench in this case? No, not a word of it.

A Joyful Thing.

It is a sweet, a joyful thing to be a sharer with Christ in anything. All enjoyments wherein he is not are bitter to the soul that loves him, and all sufferings with him are sweet The worst things of Christ are more truly delightful than the best things of the world; his afflictions are sweeter than their pleasures, his approach more rich than treasures, as Moses accounted them. Love delights in likeness and communion, not only in things otherwise pleasant, but in the hardest and harshest things, which have not anything in them desirable but only that likeness. So that this thought is very sweet to a heart possessed with this love. What does the world by its hatred, and persecution, and revilings for the sake of Christ, but make more like him, give me a greater share with him in that which he did so willingly undergo for me? "When he was sought for to be made a king," as St. Bernard remarks, "He escaped; but when he was brought to the cross, he freely yielded himself." And shall I shrink and keep back from what he calls me to suffer for his sake? Yea, even all my other troubles and sufferings I will desire to have stamped thus with this conformity to the sufferings of Christ, in the humble, obedient, cheerful endurance of them, and the giving up my will to my Father's.—Archbishop Leighton.

There is no greater virtue for every day use, than cheerfulness.

The modest man will not parade his own excellence lest he should offend.

A secret is too little for one, enough for two, and too much for three.

Happiness is like manna: it is to be gathered in grains, and enjoyed every day. It will not keep, it cannot be accumulated: nor have we got to go out of ourselves or into remote places to gather it, since it has rained down from heaven, at our very doors, or rather inside them.—Martyrio.

Life Without an Atmosphere.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

How wearily the grind of toil goes on Where love is wanting, how the eye and ear
And heart are starved amidst the plenitude
Of nature, and how hard and colorless
Is life without an atmosphere. I look
Across the lapse of half a century, [flower
And call to mind old homesteads, where no
Told that the spring had come, but evil weeds
Nightshade and rough-leaved burdock in the place
Of the sweet doorway greeting of the rose
And honeysuckle, where the house walls seemed Blistering in sun, without a tree or vine
To cast the tremulous shadows of its leaves
Across the curtainless windows from whose panes
Fluttered the signal rags of shiftlessness;
Within, the cluttered kitchen-floor, unwashed
Broom-clean I think they call it; the best room
Stifling with cellar-damp, shut from the air
In hot mid-summer, bookless, pictureless
Save the inevitable samples hung
Over the fireplace, or a mourning piece,
A green-haired woman, peony cheeked
Impossible willows, the wide-throated heart,
Bristling with faded pine-boughs half concealing
The piled up rubbish at the chimney's back;
And, in sad keeping with all things about them,
Shrill, querulous women, sour and sullen men,
Untidy, loveless, old before their time,
With scarce a human interest save their own
Monotonous sound of small economies,
Or the poor scandal of the neighborhood;
Blind to the beauty everywhere revealed,
Treading the May flowers with regardless feet;
For them the song-sparrow and the bobolink
Sang not, nor winds made music in the leaves;
For them in vain October's holocaust
Burned, gold and crimson, over all the hills,
The sacramental mystery of the woods.
Church-goers, fearful of the unseen powers,
But grumbling over pulpit-tax, and pew-rent,
Saving, as shrewd economists, their souls
And winter pork with the least possible outlay
Of sanctity; in daily life
Showing as little actual comprehension
Of Christian charity and love, aged duty,
As if the sermon on the mount had been
Outdated like a last years almanac;
Rich in broad woodlands and half tilled fields,
And yet so pinched and bare and comfort less,
The veriest straggler limping on his rounds
The sun and air his sole inheritance,
Laughed at a poverty that paid its taxes,
And hugged his rags in self-complacency.

Christian Forgiveness.

BY P. H. DAVIS.

Offenses, actual offenses, will come, in this world. They must come, because of sin in it. And this evil is rendered doubly worse by our readiness to suspect them and magnify them whether real or imaginary. And such is our constitution that our hearts naturally rise in the attitude of resistance against an injury or insult to our name, person or property. Such resentment, in fit kind and degree, is right. It is one of the securities of good society that the world will never be able to dispense with so long as sin is in it. Crime ought to be hated, and the hate manifested. Resentment ought to be felt, and the feeling ought to be shown when wrong has injured us. It is a wild and silly dream to think that we shall do the world the most good by smiling as blandly on the wrong that hurts us as on the good that helps us, Vice has never been cured by such quackery, and never will be.

But hatred to the wrong is one thing, and enmity to the doer of the wrong is quite another. Christian forgiveness has respect to this enmity in all its shades and varieties. It would annihilate this and all that springs from it. It would do this in every instance of offense. It never lays up the fault in the mind to cherish the memory of it, to nurse an unfriendly feeling because of it. It is the spirit of long and general forbearance and kindness, not ready to "think evil," but to forgive and pass over a thousand wrongs and injuries without any explanation at all. The true spirit of forgiveness will not hang on the point of restitution or repentance or amendment, especially when the offense was only personal and has not done to society a general evil. It will demand little more than that the offender shall cease to offend; and it will often go beyond this, and, itself, cease to be offended with the same things. It is the opposite of all enmity, bitterness, and ill-will—always more inclined to apologize for injuries than to look up aggravations of them. It would even return good for evil, and kindness for injury and hate, never hunting down the offender to drag him to punishment, but with the keenest feelings of pity and compassion. Let it be universally exercised; then all intercourse would be harmonious; then would we dwell together without suspicion; then would the exercise of it be no more needed.

And shall we fail in a duty upon which scripture has laid a stress so impressive? "Forgive and ye shall be forgiven." "Be ye kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you." "How often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times, but until seventy times seven." "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any, that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your tresspasses." "Forgive us us our debts as we forgive our debtors." This cluster of divine sayings puts the duty of Christian forgiveness in a light so clear, so positive, so impressive, and so important, hinging, as it does, our own forgiveness by God on our forgiving those that offend us, that none who respect the authority of the Scriptures can be indifferent concerning it. I can very easily understand how the heart of him who regards not God and his word can treasure up bitterness against his fellow; but how a regenerated man, a true believer in Christ Jesus, can store away, in his blood-washed heart, coldness, scorn, enmity, or vengeance toward the offender, is not just so clear to the writer. Is it to you, reader? He that saith he loves God and respects Bible commandments, and hates his brother—unwilling to forgive him, though he be the real offender—is wanting in simple honesty.

But there are other reasons for the enforcement of this duty, that draw equally deep.

An unforgiving disposition is a constant source of peronal unhappiness, and robs others of joys that are due them. It trains one to constant fear and uneasiness. As it broods over them it magnifies them, puts out peace of mind, and shadows the soul with the black wings of revenge. It creates a general inclination to think worse of human nature than is just, and prepares the mind to expect injuries everywhere. And hence the one who will not forgive is unfit, in fact, for the common sense and relations of society where offenses must come, unfit to find any enjoyment for self, or to add to the happiness of others. An unrelenting, unforgiving spirit puts a bitter rot into the core of all our enjoyments, and breeds contentious divisions, bitterness, wrath, strife and war, and human society loses much of its divine power to communicate felicity to its members. In the exercises of social affections, in loving and esteeming others and being loved and esteemed by them, and in the mutual offices of kindness, confidence, and good-will is to be found one of the most fruitful sources of earthly bliss. And a being who receives so much from society may well afford to bear something from it, and should add, as he may add, to the common stock of happiness, by a forgiving spirit.

But then no man can live in this world without being himself an offender. Purposely or otherwise, he will offend. The man does not live who does not need forgiveness himself. "If his injustice has not offended, his pride may have done so,—his coldness, his indifference, his haughtiness, his vanity, his want of sympathy, his distance and reserve may have done so. And such a wound is often worse, more painful, than could be inflicted by injuring the property or violating the external rights of our fellows. It may sink deeper into the heart and lie among those tender and cherished feelings whose bleeding is most easy and most severe." How inconsistent and inconsiderate it must be for one who has offended so much and so deeply to cherish offenses instead of forgetting them. Himself an offender, and needing to be forgiven, how unfit that he should refuse to others the very forgiveness that he needs himself! To set himself up as superior to such necessity, and, by indifference to the feelings of his fellows, or by reliance upon his wealth, power, place or name, to be led to say or feel that he does not care for their forgiveness, is itself an offense,—an insult, mean and little. He ought to care. Humanity and manliness, as well as Christianity, demand it of him. He would care if he were not at once supremely selfish and supremely vain,—yea, supremely mean. Yet we have not only offended man, but God. We have offended him as our bitterest enemy could not offend us. And had he no disposition to forgive us, the shadows of the blackest despair had already settled about all our hopes — But that he might forgive, and forgive the very last of our wrongs, he has borne with us, giving us time for repentance. And shall we, who are out of hell by a gracious forbearance, and who expect heaven only as a gracious boon to offenders, deny forgiveness to our fellows? Shall we receive so much from God and refuse so little to man? Surely no man who fitly feels what a sinner he is, what a miserable offender against infinite goodness, can find it in his heart to deal hardly toward an offending brother. Our fellows may have greatly wronged us, may owe us much, but we owe these infinitely more. And should God feel and act toward us as we do toward those that may have wronged us, "gone forever" would be our last hope. But not so. Infinite pity weeps over our follies, and infinite mercy anxiously offers forgiveness to all. Those offending against us have injured us only in mere trifles. They have touched none of our dearest interests. They have not injured our piety, or made it more difficult to love God and confide in him. They have not made dying harder, the judgement more terrible, God less forgiving; heaven less holy, or its sainted songs less sweet. Not an item of interest in the bright beyond have they touched.

And then this creature who has wronged us, against whom we bear malice, to whom we are so unwilling to grant pardon, is only a frail, erring mortal, weak and sinful, with his face set toward the tomb, and with hurried pace is he going down to its eternal silence. Few are his joys, and they but brief. Many are his sorrows. Often does his heart bleed under trial, and he sighs for the rest of the grave. And shall we see him trudge life's weary way, bearing all of its burdens, go to his death-bed and out into the silent land unsoothed by a kind word, unsolaced by our heart's forgiveness? We, too, are weak and wicked. Soon we shall sleep the sleep of death at his side; our heads will lie as low as his. And soon, by his side, shall we stand in the last judgment. Let us not go to the grave and the spirit-land with wrath in our hearts. "Forgive, and you shall be forgiven."—Religious Telescope.

Insurance Companies.

This is the heading of a few articles in Nos. 40 and 41, by which we still perceive, as heretofore, that the Brethren seem to think it requisite to have our property insured, and even life not excepted. Why so? Because it is almost universally so done; and in consequence of this, we are led to believe it is highly necessary for us to resort to the same means of recovering value or sustenance in case of loss; hence the cry is: "Have a company of our own, or amongst the Brotherhood, to avoid brethren insuring in companies of the world, which is exceptional, because they, in the end, are money schemes." We seem to be a hard learning people, that not until now we could perceive the object of these different insurance companies to be, finally, speculating with our money. But now to the proposition. We have, in different localities, just what you propose, which stands as a test, and what is the result? No advantage have such companies, generally called home insurance companies, over others. So declare its members. I was informed, not long ago, by a member of such a company, that he paid more since having united himself to that company than in all other companies; consequently, other companies are just as responsible and economical.

Much could be said, and should be said, on this subject, but for want of time I will drop off, by stating the exceptions taken to not insuring. They say, "In case you suffer loss, you will be left to yourself." Also, "why did you not get insured?" &c. Hear the rejoinder: "If I have have food and raiment, it is all I ask."

Finally, brethren, what have we gained after all our labor and institutions of this kind? Still an unlocked purse to distribute out of, here and there; and let it be so, then all will be right. Therefore, I consider such institutions uncalled for, until suffering becomes prevalent and they will prevent it. D. Fike.

Editor's Diary.

SATURDAY, Nov. 2nd. If only our readers can endure our scribbling, it will be a consolation to know that we can fill our paper ourself, if no one else intends to come to our assistance. And we have plenty of matter, too, such as it is; but it does appear to us like imposition to force so much of our own personal experience upon our readers. But hitherto there has been no complaint, and we think our patrons are pretty well trained in the virtue of standing up for their preferences and rights, and we expect them to do so in this case. Whenever this diary becomes too prolix, please ask for a little less of it.

Our last report closed on Friday, without referring to much of its experiences. Brother Beer was somewhat ill, for several days, and this forenoon it became evident that he was unable to fill an appointment that had been made for him at Grantsville, Md. So it appeared to become our duty to take his place, which we finally, somewhat reluctantly, agreed to do. So according to arrangement, brother Joel Gnagy took us with him in his buggy,and we set out upon the journey, at about two o'clock. We had not gone far until it commenced to rain, and then to snow, until the tops of the surrounding hills and mountains became white; and we had a bad afternoon to travel. Arrived at brother Emanuel Gnagy's, who lives in sight of Grantsville, at about dark. Here we received a warm reception and enjoyed a warm stove, both very desirable in our case. After a palatable supper we repaired to the Lutheran meeting-house, where we tried to hold forth the Word as the Lord gave ability, to an attentive audience. We think this would be a good place for the Brethren to labor with reasons to hope for success. The attendance was good for the very bad state of the weather.

We took up our lodgings at the house of brother Samuel J. Livengood, a deacon in our congregation, and one of our energetic agents. He is in the mercantile business, and is doing a fair business.

SUNDAY, 3d. This forenoon there was an appointment, at a school-house, about three miles distant, near brother Solomon Baker's, called Engle's school-house. The weather was still bad, yet there was a fair turn out, and good attention. Brother Gnagy spoke in German, from Luke 13: 18–24, and we followed in English. We had put up our team at brother Baker's and so we also stopped with them for dinner. As we had decided to return home in the afternoon, we were obliged to make our visit short. We were very strongly urged to leave another appointment, but were not willing to take it upon ourselves. Hope the brethren will be supplied.

On our return homeward we met quite a number of the Amish folks returning from their meeting. We learned that they had held a choice, and cast lots for a minister, and that the lot had fallen upon one Moses Yoder, residing near Grantsville. We are told they hold an election very much as we do. Then if there are different names, receiving votes, as there always are, several of those having the highest number, are taken, and lots are cast, and upon whosoever the lot falls, he becomes the preacher.

We returned to our home at about seven in the evening, in time for, but a little too tired to go to preaching. We learned that brother Jos. B. SELL and brother JONAS LICHTY did the preaching, and that at the forenoon meeting brother Sell was alone. Brother LINT and brother BEER were both too unwell to attend.

MONDAY, 4th. To-day the DALE CITY RECORD, of which a specimen copy was published in the latter part of April last, became a fixed institution. We have engaged the services of Mr. J. C. Postlewait, formerly of Somerset, as editor. The paper will make its appearance on the 15th inst. and thereafter regularly every Friday. Price $1 50 per annum, in advance. Address H. R. Holsinger, Dale City, Somerset County, Penn'a. The paper will be independent in everything. It will be devoted principally to the interests of the town and community; but will participate in the discussion of all useful topics, in which its patrons especially are interested. Those of the readers of COMPANION who were once residents of Somerset county, will find something to interest them in the columns of the RECORD.

TUESDAY and Wednesday we will omit; having other matter of more importance to us.

Now for Volume Nine.

And of course you will want to hear first of all what we have to say; what propositions, promises, &c. Indeed, kind reader, we would gladly propose something that would stir you up to double your efforts to work for us, and that might thus double our circulation, but we have nothing of that kind to offer, that we can just now call to mind. We might get up a sensation, upon some imaginary expectation; but our observation teaches us that that would not pay. We have known publishers who tried it, by making promises which they could not fulfil. We think the safest way is always the best. We had expected to create some enthusiasm by changing the form of our paper; but that worked the wrong way for us; and considerably quelled our ambition: not however, to such a degree as to discourage us. When people tell us to "let good enough alone;' they verily tell us that that something is good enough; and when that something has reference to our paper, we think it saying a great deal.

So, to make the story short, we can do no better than to promise our readers that we will strive to do the very best we can for them. We will labor busily the whole year. Will publish the best matter in our paper that we can possibly secure. We will keep its columns free from everything that we think could possibly be detrimental to the cause of truth. In short, we think we may safely promise to do fully as well as we ever did, and if we can we will do better. We will certainly try.

One thing we just now think of. Several years ago there was a great peace cry raised through our columns. Peace! PEACE!! PEACE!!! was the cry. Down with your controversy. We must all be of one mind. In obedience to the cry, and through the advice of our Assistant we have been running somewhat upon that principle; and do you know that we have not been increasing our list at a corresponding rate during the last two years? That is so. And now, if, during the coming year, the peace principle does not operate more profitably, we shall again adopt the principle of our Savior: "I am not come to send peace, but a sword;" and believe we have entered the age of the world when the cry is "peace, peace, when there is no peace."

So now you have what we have to say. The COMPANION will be published another year, no providential interference, upon the same principles as heretofore, and in the same form, size, and style, and upon the same terms. Only, (mark this item) we propose to adopt the cash system, whenever practicable, money appears to be getting a little more easy, and when it can be done, we should be pleased to receive cash in advance.

Now, reader, we are coming to the practical part of our remarks, and we wish you to pay special attention.

First. If you are not an agent, and do not expect to become one, then resolve at once the first time you see the brother or sister who is acting agent for the Companion, you will renew your subscription. And if you have not just the money about you, ask a friend to loan you the amount. By doing this you will encourage the agent, and very much facilitate the business. Do not expect the agent to follow you up and coax you for your name. It is no paying business to our agents. And is it not an accommodation to you to have them send your name and money, and thus save you time, expense, and the risk of losing the money by mail. Please think of it in this way, will you? And it is even now high time to attend to the matter. By all means we should have our list for the new year made up by the middle of December. You can scarcely appreciate how much advantage it would be to us to have all the names in for the new year, by the time the old list expires, which is generally about the fifteenth of December.—All the names of subscribers for the present year are in type. If they are renewed at the time the last paper for this year is sent out they may be left in type for another year. If not they must be distributed, and when renewed set up again. This alone is quite an additional trouble and expense; besides there are other disadvantages. Will you not therefore heed our request to be punctual? And remember that it will require some time for your letter to reach us, and that will be all the better if it will come to hand two weeks earlier.

Second. If you are not, or have not been an agent, but have by any means received an agent's outfit, as all those subscribers will where but one copy goes to an office, will you not be good enough to take our list and make an effort to get subscribers for us? If you could just get one more it will very materially aid us. In nine cases out of ten you will succeed. At any rate will you try. We have great confidence in the word" try," and still more in "try again."

Third. If you are an agent, you will know your business; and we can only solicit you to continue giving us your support, and entreat you to act promptly, and perseveringly. Have it made known at once, and as thoroughly as possible that you are acting agent for the Companion and that the time is at hand for renewing subscriptions. Wherever it is practical collect the money when you take the names. Have your territory thoroughly canvassed. Solicit the influence of other brethren and sisters in your neighborhood. If possible send in your lists by the middle of December. Fail not in a single instance to fill up the blank and to sign your name at the place indicated, and if you wish the paper yourself, add your name to the list also.

You will perceive that the papers are smaller than formerly. This has purposely been done for the sake of economy, as heretofore not one in five was filled. Where a larger one is needed, an addition can easily be appended.

Please use the printed envelope.

Remittances may be made in Drafts, Checks, Money Orders payable at Somerset, Pa., or by registered letter. Sending money by Express is very expensive, and must always be done at the sender's expense.

All the numbers of this year, remaining at the time the subscriptions are received, will be sent free to new subscribers.

And now we shall patiently await the result, hoping it will be favorable.

TO-DAY.—Rather a strange name.

TO-DAY.—A very common word, but rather a strange name for a weekly paper; but that is nevertheless its name. It is published by McLean, Stoddard & Co., Philadelphia, and edited by Dio Lewis, It is very neat and contains several illustrations. It is rather literary in its tendencies, but proposes to assist in making impressions for good, and especially to labor against those influences that destroy the public health. Price, $2.50 per annum, in advance.

Answers to Correspondents.

MARY M. PEFFLEY. Please send us your address for important business.

J. J. FAUSNACHT: Suppose the mistake was ours, as your name was entered twice on our book. All right, sell the book, and remit the money.

JOHN SHICK: We have squared accounts.

MOSES LIGHT: We have no knowledge of the manuscript.

Summer Heat in Various Countries.

For the benefit of our readers, we have collected, from various sources, the following, relative to the extreme summer temperature of the different countries of the world :

Thibet, situated in Central Asia, between thirtieth and thirty-eighth parallels of north latitude, is a decidedly hot country; so hot, indeed, that even the fiercest heat which the firemen in a sea-going steamer have to endure is scarcely equal to its midsummer temperature.

Senegal, in Africa, and the island of Gaudeloupe, in the West Indes are next to Thibet in summer heat; the weather is variable, but sometimes reaches a temperature of 120°. Still more changeable is the climate of the Great Desert Saharah, where the thermometer, after rising 130° during the day, at nightfall descends to among the fifties. In Persia, fearful plagues and pestilence are bred by an atmosphere heated to 125°. At Calcutta, and on the Delta of the Ganges, points from which the Asiatic cholera is said to begin its western march, the mercury rises to 120°, while in Central America the same limit is attained.

In the jungles of Affghanistan and in the deserts of Egypt 110° is the maximum. Strange to say, the same high temperature is reached in some of the interior valleys of California, although the average of the surrounding countries is much lower. At Cape Colony, the diamond diggings in Africa, and in some parts of Utah Territory, the midsummer heat is 105°. This is next greatest in Greece, reaching 104°; then comes Arabia, 103°, the arid deserts of that country being much less heated than the vast expanse of Sahara. Now follows a strange anomaly; it will hardly be credited that our blue-nosed neighbors in Canada ever experience such a temperature, but it is nevertheless a fact, that at Montreal the extreme summer heat is often as high as that of the deserts of Arabia, both being 103°.

New York is not far behind, its summer limit being 102°. Spain, Upper India, Canton, China, the island of Jamaica, and most of our southern states average 100° With the exception of New York, 98°, is the highest range in the northern states. The island of Mauritius is next on the list, having a summer temperature of 96°; then come Sierra Leone, in Africa, and Guiana, in South America, both 94°; then Ceylon, 92°. Throughout France in St. Petersburg (Russia), Denmark, Belgium, Burmah, Shangai in China, Penang, the Sandwich Islands; Buenos Ayers, and the islands of Bourbon and Trinidad, the average is 90°. That of Nova Scotia and the majority of the Azores islands is 87°. England, Ireland, Sicily, Siam, and Peru, in summer are about the same temperature, not exceeding 85°. Pekin (in China), Portugal, and Natal Colony (in Africa) all have mild summers. 80°. being the extreme. In Siberia, 77° is the limit. In western and southern Australia and the eastern and western part of Scotland, the temperature does not rise above 75°. In Italy, Venezuela, and Madeira, 73° is the maximum.

The thermometer in Prussia Victoria Land, and New Zealand, rarely rises above 70°; in New South Wales not above 68°; nor, in Switzerland and Hungary above 66°. Colder still are the summers in Bavaria, Sweden, northern Siberia, Tasmania, and Moscow in Russia, where 65° is the extreme limit. Norway, Greenland, and Newfoundland have no weather warmer than 60°; 55° is the maximum for Central Scotland, the Orkney Isles, Patagonia, and the Falkland Islands; and finally, amid the ice and snow of the arctic regions, the heat of midsummer is below 50.°

Iceland, however, is colder still. The northern portions of that country virtually have no summer; on its southern shore which are swept by the Gulf Stream, the temperature sometimes rises to 45°. Last comes Nova Zembla, bleakest and most inhospitable of islands, lying frozen in the Arctic Ocean, on the confines of northern Asia. It can be truly said that in that country there is no summer; for even in midsummer days, while we suffer under the intense heat, there the mercury fails to rise beyond 34°,—two degrees above the freezing point,—and this is the extreme of the temperature.—Scientific American.

Christian Morality.

I do not forget that Christian morality has been a thing of degrees and impulses, rising and falling; that it has been at times impracticably extreme, and at times scandulously lax; that there have been periods when it seemed lost; that in some of its best days it has been unaccountably blind and perversely stupid and powerless, conniving at gross and undeniable inconsistencies, condoning flagrant wrong. This is true. Yet look through all the centuries since it appeared, and see if ever, in the worst and darkest of them, it was not there, as it never was in Rome, for hope, if not for present help and remedy. There was an undying voice, even if it came from the lips of hypocrites, which witnessed perpetually of mercy, justice, and peace. There was a seriousness given to human life, by a death everywhere died in the prospect in the judgment. I am putting things at the worst. Christian morality lived even in the tenth century; even in the times of Borgias and Medici. The wicked passed,—the wicked age, the wicked men; passed, with the evil they had done; with the good which they had frustrated; with the righteous whom they had silenced or slain. And when they were gone, "when the tyranny was overpast," the unforgotten law of right, the inextinguishable power of conscience, were found to have survived unweakened through the hour of darkness, ready to reassert and extend their empire. Great as have been the disasters and failures of Christian Society, I think we have not yet seen the kind of hopeless collapse in which Roman civilization ended. Feeble and poor as the spring of morality might be in this or that people, there has hitherto been something to appeal to and to hope from, which was not to be found in the days of the Antonines, the most peaceful and felicitous of Roman times.—R. W. Church.

Irregularity and want of method are only supportable in men of great learning or genius, who are too full to be exact, and therefore choose to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader, rather than be at the pains of stringing them.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Notes of Travel.

J. S. FLORY.

Left Louisburg, Miami, Co., Kansas, Tuesday, 8th of October, for Mo. Arrived at Holden, at 8 P. M., where we lay over until next morning, when we went by first train to Centreview, Johnson Co., Mo. Called upon brother A. Hutchinson, living in town.—Was truly glad to meet with our former co-laborer once more. Enjoying the hospitalities of his home until after dinner, when we took a ride with him into the country, and then went to Brother A. Stoner's where we met sister Anna Langer, wife's sister. In the evening, meeting in the Methodist Church in town. Home with brother Jacob and sister Susan Crumpacker. Sister Susan is also wife's sister.

Next morning, in company with them, went to brother Kinsers; after dinner to brother Killingsworth and to brother Scaggs; in the evening to brother Repp's where we passed the night. In the morning went to Centreview to take the train. While with the dear ones at that point, we were kindly cared for, and we truly enjoyed the hospitality of their homes, and shall not soon forget their deeds of love. We were soon on our way to Kansas City, where we arrived before noon, and having to wait on an eastern train until evening, we improved the opportunity of taking a stroll through the streets of that prosperous and busy city. It is truly a great railroad centre and place of business. Among other sights which we saw in the city, was a fire, a great crowd of people, fire engines at work, &c. City people are used to such things. At near 5 P, M., we were on our way eastward. At 8 o'clock we arrived at Hamilton, Mo., where we contemplated stopping over.—Elder George Witmer met us at the depot, and conducted us to his home in town, where we were soon made to feel at home with his kind family.

Next morning brother Peter Overholtzer, who had come up from Andrew Co., the day before, took us to the place of communion meeting, 4 miles north of Hamilton, at the house of brother W. B. Sell. Had a convenient plank shed prepared for the occasion. Public preaching at 3 P. M., at night the usual exercise, having brethren present from other congregations, Daniel Gibson, of Clinton Co,, Peter Overholtzer and Daniel Glich of Anderson Co. About 50 members communed, and we must say we felt that we had a feast of love together indeed. Home with brother Abraham Sell. Public preaching again at 11 o'clock, also at 3 P. M., after which a kind brother volunteered to take us to Hamilton. Spent a pleasant evening at brother G. Witmer's in social exhortation and worship with the family and a few neighbors who had been invited in. Accompanied brother D. B. and sister Sell to their home near by. Sister Fanny is the eldest daughter of brother G. Witwer. Here, like elsewhere we were kindly entertained. Next morning we had to take leave of all that section; and we can truly say, our sojourn of two days among the Brethren there was a season of joy; and notwithstanding we went as a stranger among strangers, we felt when we left that we had formed dear acquaintances, and our associations were such that we shall not soon forget them and their deeds of love. We left Hamilton on the morning of the 14th, and on the evening of the 15th we were in Cincinnati, where we had to lie until next evening, when we came up the Ohio on the steamer "Jessee," and arrived at Huntington the morning of the 18th at 3 o'clock. Took the train at 7 A. M. Stopped over at Charleston with the family of brother J. Starkey, where I was kindly entertained until evening, when I took the train and arrived at the Falls of Kanawha at 8 o'clock at night, and home next day. Found all well. Thank the Lord for his protecting grace. My health has been improved considerably, and I feel the Lord has been good to me. Honor and praise be ascribed to his holy Name.

Brother M. J. Thomas, I am pleased to read an article so interesting, so beautiful and so consoling, as that on the subject of the resurrection so ably held forth by you, in No. 35. But there are a few things in your article which I could not reconcile with the Bible; but may be I did not apprehend your idea of the subject, where you say, "The light of nature is sufficient to tell us that the soul is immortal."—Are we to understand that the light of nature was all the light we needed? Is that the reason the Bible does not teach it? And, again, you say, "There are some faint glimmerings in men of reason, who teach that the soul is something so wonderful that it cannot die." Please be so kind and reconcile the above with the following Scriptures, Ezel. 18: 20, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Isa. 53: 12, "Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he has poured out his soul unto death." Acts, 3: 23, "Every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed." Acts, 2: 27, "Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy one to see corruption." Psalms, 49: 19, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." Psalms, 56: 13, "For thou hast delivered my soul from death."

Written by your brother, who desires to know nothing but the truth as it is in the Bible.

JOHN FORNEY, SEN.

Falls City, Nebraska.

Dear Companion:— On Wednesday, 23d, we had the pleasure of meeting with the brethren of the Elk Lick congregation at the Love-feast at their large and commodious meeting-house near Mechanicsburg; which, to our astonishment on account of the inclemency of the road and weather, was almost filled with people, and, to our surprise, saw the best conduct that we ever saw at such a place. The young took such an active part in singing; and the able and energetic sermons we heard more than paid us a thousand times for our journey. We also felt gratified with the accommodations of the brethren, in seeing them conveying brethren from one place to another. May the Lord reward them for their labor.

We also had the pleasure of meeting with the Brethren in their meeting-house at Dale City, where we heard the best music we ever heard. The brethren here are under the control and led by Eld. C. G. Lint, who possesses a vast degree of manly eloquence, and who seems to have a great influence as their Leader. We were reminded of Moses, in ancient times, when he led the Israelites out from under their bondage under king Pharaoh; they being subject to his commands. The brethren, as well as we, had a happy season, although the rain made the roads almost impassable, without a conveyance of some kind. There was great interest manifested at this communion season. We enjoyed it much. May we always be grateful in all things, wherever we are, and may we all try to lead a holy life, so that we can be numbered with the blessed in heaven, where the meetings will never break up, where parting will be known no more, where we may all be so unspeakably happy as to meet on the sunny banks of fair deliverance, there to enjoy bliss in ages without end, where the weary are at rest.

Proposed Visits.

Brother Henry; I propose, the Lord willing, to visit the following churches:

November 25, and 26, Clover Creek,
" 27, and 28, Yellow Creek,
" 29, and 30, & Dec. 1st Snake Spring Valley.

December 2d, leave Bloody Run for Dale City and spend two days there.

December, 4th and 5th, Berlin,
" 6th and 7th, Middle Creek.
" 8th and 9th, Quemahoning.
" 10th and 11th, Shade.

I expect the brethren to convey me from place to place, except from Bloody Run to Dale City.

The brethren can make their own arrangements for meetings, allowing part of the first day named for each place, for transportation. I desire some brother along the route to accompany me.

JAMES A. SELL.

Newry, Pa.

REMARKS: That part of this programme belonging to Somerset County, was made in this office, by request of brother Sell. We would in addition suggest that the brethren meet him from the congregation to which he is next expected. For instance, let the Berlin brethren meet him here; the Middle Creek brethren meet him at Berlin, &c. This will give him a little acquaintance and an opportunity of knowing the arrangements in advance. He will also most likely have a day or two left, for which time his labors might be secured, by addressing him, or meeting him at this place.

To my Friends and Brethren.

WELLSVILLE, PA., Nov. 1st, 1872.

This leaves us all well but my poor self. I am still not able to get out of bed alone, on my chair or off it. I can't even sit up on my bed without help. The abscess is still discharging, and is so near my spine that my spine is affected, so that it makes me helpless. And my legs are so swollen with the dropsy that the great weight in them disables any action whatever. So I must suffer all that, and in addition a very bad bed sore, which gives me much pain, so that I can't lie on my back, upon my side that the abscess is on, I could not lie for over a year, and the other side is very sore at present, so that I can lay on it but a short time. I am so sore of sitting on my arm chair, that I can scarcely sit any time. This is my present condition. And where can I have any pleasure at living at this poor rate.—My appetite is very poor, and very often when I do eat I must throw it up right off. At night I can't sleep, or even rest. I must be changed every hour or two in my position, and this charge falls on my poor wife, who has been under it over one year. She has not had her clothes off at night nor been in bed to sleep for a long while. She is all the time close by my bed, nor has she murmured nor complained once, to my knowledge. May God bless her is my prayer.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

EDITORS COMPANION:—Our communion meetings are over. At our first meeting the Brethren ordained brother A. Hanson Sensenly, forwarded to second degree in the ministry, brother Amos Caylor, and elected to visit (or deacon) brother Joseph Stoner. Last Sunday we baptized three young persons. We had good meetings, and I hope the labors of the brethren will be blessed in the return of many more to the father's house. Brother C. G. Lint was with us, and labored faithfully. May the Lord abundantly bless him and all of us, that we may be faithful, and at last meet at home where no farewells will be given.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the West Branch Church, Ogle Co., Oct. 24th, sister MARTHA SAYLER, aged 24 years, 10 months and 5 days. Our dear sister was sick only a few days, she had lived a Christian life, and we need not mourn as those who have no hope. Leaves a kind husband, mother, sisters and a brother to mourn her death. Funeral services by M. Emmert and E. Newcomer, from Matthew 24: 44.

JOHN DIEHL.

Near Bloomville, Ohio, Oct. 22nd, sister CHRISTINA DOWNS wife of brother Stephen Downs, and daughter of Elder John Brillhart, aged 32 years, 11 months and 8 days. A husband and six small children are bereft of an affectionate wife and a kind mother. God bless the little children. She consecrated her life to the service of God in her youthful days, and we firmly believe she was "meet for the Master's use." Funeral discourses by brethren David Roop and John Shontz, from Tim. 4: 7, 8.

Visitor, please copy. S. A. WALKER.

In the Eagle Creek Branch, Hancock Co., Ohio, Oct. 11th, our beloved brother, DANIEL B. BOSSERMAN, aged 20 years 7 months and 16 days. Disease, Typhus fever. He joined the Church in early youth, and lived a consistent life. He was loved by all who knew him; yet we had to part with him. We trust he is at home with all the sanctified. He is the third one that has died out of father's family of 11 children, all of whom are members of the Church of the Brethren, except our two little brothers, who, we believe, are not far from the kingdom, and will soon enlist. Funeral discourse by Brother J. J. Rosenberger and others, from Job 19: 25, 26.

S. T. BOSSERMAN.

In the Log Creek Church, Caldwell Co., Missouri, Oct. 28th, our beloved brother DANIEL ZIMMERMAN, aged 71 years, 4 months and 4 days. The circumstances of his death were about as follows: The day before he was at meeting in his usual health, which was always good, never having been sick. On the morning of his death, when he arose, he complained of being light-headed; he lay down again and in a few minutes died. In his death the church has lost a faithful brother, his companion a kind husband, and the neighborhood a worthy citizen, which we believe is his eternal gain. Occasion improved by the brethren.

PETER OVERHOLTZER.

In the Lick Creek Branch, Williams Co., Ohio, Sept. 25th, sister MARY ELIZABETH YOCUM, daughter of brother Lemuel and sister Elizabeth Yocum; aged 20 years 4 months and 1 day. Funeral services by the writer and J. Moore, from Matthew 25: 21.

DAVID RITTENHOUSE.

Visitor please copy.

At South Bend, Indiana, September 26th, of Typhoid Fever, sister NANCY LUCAS, aged 47 years, 7 months and 28 days. Sister Lucas was born in Adams county, Penn'a, a daughter of our much beloved old brother and sister John and Rebecca Studebaker. She joined the Church in Ohio at the age of 22, married John Lucas at the age of 25, and lived a consistent Christian life, beloved by all who knew her, she leaves her aged parents, five brothers, four sisters, a son and daughter, and many friends to mourn the loss of one so near and dear to them. Before her decease she called for the Elders of the Church and was annointed in the name of the Lord, and expressed her desire to depart and be with the Lord. Funeral services by Elder D. B. Sturgis to a large assembly.

Valuable Farm for Sale

I Will offer for sale, on the premises, at public auction, on Thursday the 10th day of October, 1872 (if not sold privately before,) the farm on which I resided about 16 miles west of Lewisburg, in Greenbrier county, W. Virginia, on the James River and Kanawah Turnpike, containing about 500 A. On which is situated a large Brick Dwelling-house and Kitchen, stable and other buildings. This property is good for grain or grass, and is a convenient and a desirable residence. About one-third of the land is cleared and the rest in timber. All well watered, and could be divided into two or three farms if desirable. Any one desiring to inspect the property can do so by calling on Wm. R. Sharp, who lives adjoining the premises. Title Good.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

"The Prodigal Son."

Brother, hast thou wandered far
From thy father's happy home?
With thyself and God at war?
Turn thee, brother, homeward come.

Hast thou wasted all the powers
God for noble uses gave?
Squandered life's most golden hours?
Turn thee, brother, God can save.

Is a mighty famine now
In thy heart and in thy soul?
Discontent upon thy brow? [whole.
Turn thee, God will make thee

He can heal thy bitterest wounds:
He thy gentlest prayer can hear:
Seek Him, for He may be found;
Call upon Him, He is near.

Having our Hearts Sprinkled from an Evil Conscience. Hebrews 10: 22.

[Selected from Notes of DR. NEWTON.]

God uses conscience as a clerk to keep an account of what we do. Conscience is God's scribe, or private secretary. It writes down all that we do or say, think or feel. During the reign of queen Mary, in England, good Bishop Latimer was brought to trial for his religion. In the room in which his trial took place was a curtain, and behind this curtain was a man writing. Whenever he answered a question he could hear the sound of this man's pen, as he wrote down every word that was spoken. The bishop said that the sound of that pen made him feel very careful to say nothing, but what he knew was true. And this is just the way that we should feel all the time. Conscience, God's secretary, is writing down everything that we do, whether it be good or bad; and the Book in which all this is written, is no doubt, the Book of God's remembrance, that the Bible tells about, and out of which we are to be judged at the last day.

Some time ago two young men went to a livery stable to hire a horse and carriage. They told the keeper of the stable that they only wanted to go to a village seven miles off. When they came back, the man thought the horse looked as though he had been driven much farther than that. He asked them how much farther they had been. They said, they had been only to the next village. Then he opened a box that was fastened to the side of the carriage. In this box was a little thing almost like a clock. This had the power of keeping a correct account of every turn made by the wheels of the carriage. It did this by pointing with a finger to the figures on the dial plate. The man knew how many turns of the wheel it took to make a mile, and so when he saw the figure to which the finger pointed he knew in a moment how many miles the carriage had been. As soon as he opened his box he saw that the carriage had travelled thirty miles instead of fourteen. Those young men didn't know that they were carrying with them a silent witness against themselves. They didn't know that that little instrument was keeping time or a correct account of every yard of ground they went over. Just so it is with conscience. It is busy all the time; and at last it will give a correct account of all that we have done.

Translation of the Scriptures.

Sometimes I have made myself these thoughts. If the people generally knew how difficult it is to translate correctly out of one language into another, and how imperfect the translations of the Scriptures are, they would spend less time in disputing about words, and feel less inclined to censure others on account of some difference of opinion or understanding. The greatest difference in the translation of the Scriptures I have ever met with, is found in the 8th verse of the 32nd chapter of the prophet Isaiah. In King James' version of the Bible we have, "But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand."

In the Douay Bible, or Catholic version of scriptures, we find, "But the prince will devise such things as are worthy of a prince; and he shall stand above the rulers."

In Luther's translation of the Scriptures, we have,

Aber die Fürsten werden fürstliche Gedanken haben, und darüber halten.

This is about as much as to say, "But the governers will have exalted thoughts, and contend for them." My impressions are, that the spiritual meaning of the 8th verse is about the same as the meaning of the first that in Christ's kingdom righteousness will be exalted, and that those who govern will have a correct understanding of things; and their decisions will be so rendered that the poor and the weak will not be oppressed.

Quincy, Pa.

We Shall Know Each Other In Heaven.

Shall we not know each other when we are examined and judged at the bar of God? Then "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil;" Eccles. 12: 13 In that great day, when the world is judged in righteousness, every character will be made manifest before an assembled world. But how can we hear the impartial examination of the Judge without a knowledge of the parties concerned, especially if we knew them, and had connections with them in the present world. Thus it appears that every thing, and consequently every person, will then be made known. "The dead, small and great, will stand before God. The books, in which the conduct of man has been recorded, will be opened, and every one will be judged in righteousness according to his works." Rev. 20: 12, 13. Every individual will then be personally known, with every circumstance of his life, and the state in which he must enter after the sentence has been pronounced. Shall we not know our religious friends when we see them at the right hand of the Judge—those with whom we shall enter into the Kingdom of God? If it be objected, that a knowledge of our relations and acquaintances, who may be banished from Christ, will fill us with grief, we reply: We shall then have such views of the equity of the Judge, that nothing will distress us that is done by him. All his works will appear fit and proper; and we shall say, "It is the Lord: let him do what seemeth him good;" 1st Samuel 3: 18. We may argue this question from that fellowship of saints which is begun on earth, but perfected in heaven. Can this be carried into effect, if they do not know each other, when they meet in glory? It is affirmed of our present state, that "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another;" 1st John 1: 7. Will not this continue and increase, when we meet in the New Jerusalem? Shall we not know them, those holy and happy souls with whom we have held sweet communion on earth, and with whom we shall enjoy a delightful union in Heaven? With them we have prayed, with them we have suffered in the cause of God, and with them we have fought and conquered. Our souls united by love, have jointly offered up praise and thanksgiving to God; and we have worshipped him together in the Spirit and in truth, in his holy Sanctuary. Will all these things, with all our pious conversations, be buried in eternal oblivion, when we stand before the Lord and worship him in his holy temple on Mount Zion? The idea is extremely absurd. "Is it possible that we should be happy hereafter in the same seats of joy, under the same perfect government, and as members of the same Heavenly society, and yet remain strangers to one another? Shall we be together with Christ and yet not with one another? Being in the same happy state with our present virtuous friends and relatives, will they not be accessible to us, and if accessible, shall we not fly to them and mingle hearts and souls again?"—Dr. Price.

But how shall we know those holy persons who lived in former ages, and in distant climes? The answer is easy. Intelligent spirits, who knew them all well, will make them known to us in friendly conversation. How did the three disciples of our Lord know Enoch and Elijah, when they appeared with him on the mount? It is probable that they received information from their Master, to whom those departed saints were well known; and in the heavenly world it may be said to us, "This is Abraham, that is Job, and that is Daniel." And all these saints, when once made known to us, will be known forever. If we were to travel to any civilized region of this world, should we not be introduced to the inhabitants of the place by some friendly person who might know them? Are saints less courteous in the heavenly world than men on earth? In that world of felicity, holy spirits of every rank take pleasure in communicating happiness; and our happiness will be greatly augmented by a knowledge of all the inhabitants of that place, where we shall live to all eternity—and will not the Lord of all worlds, who has connected our happiness with the sacred ties of friendship, appoint certain spirits to discover to us those holy spirits whom we knew before and with whom we shall live forever? Angels have charge of every good man on earth, from the beginning of the world, and they know every one by name—and will not those holy spirits discover the saints to each other? and shall we not receive from them extensive information of those good men to whom they ministered in the present world? The saints of former ages, who are far advanced in knowledge may be appointed to instruct their younger brethren. The divine Being, who knows all things, employs instruments and agents to instruct men; and why may he not pursue a similar plan, in his wise goverment of angels and saints, in the world of glory.

We do not pretend to explain how those happy spirits instruct each other. It has not been revealed; and it is a subject which our limited powers cannot discover, for we are unacquainted with their language, their organs of speech, and their method of communicating ideas; but it must be absurd to suppose that they are less perfect in those things than mortal men in the present state of comparative ignorance. No doubt they excel, in every method that can be used, of communicating thought from one intellectual being to another—and could they be ignorant of each other? Will nothing be said, by any intellectual spirits, to bring to remembrance, persons and things of former times? Scripture and reason are both at variance with the absurd opinion. But what sweet and edifying conversations may be expected, between kindred spirits, in that happy world! how amazingly will these be heightened by a perfect knowledge of each other, when all have passed through this world of sin and sorrow, we will ever be ready to teach one another, and all will rejoice in the acquisition of knowledge! The mind of every one will be enlarged; truth will be unfolded; and all will be innocent and holy. The joy rising from a knowledge of each other will be mutual; and to know, and be made known will produce pleasure that cannot be expressed. But if former things are to be forgotten, and if we are to remain strangers to each other, our bliss will be imperfect. The ties of friendship will be weakened: and all its peculiar enjoyments considerably abridged. May God pardon all that I have been writing amiss, and bless all that is in accordance with his will and word.

"I Will Never Leave Thee."

In these words the English language fails to give the full meaning of the Greek. It implies, "Never, no, never; no, no, ever!" This world is a world of "leaving, parting, separation, failure and disappointment." Think of finding something that will never leave nor fail. Grasp this promise. "I will never leave thee," and store it in your heart. you will want it one day. The hour will come when you will find nothing so comforting or cheering as a sense of God's companionship. Stick to that word "never." It is worth its weight in gold. Cling to it as a drowning man clings to a rope. Grasp it firmly, as a soldier attacked on all sides, grasps his sword. "Never!" Though your heart faints, and you are sick of self failures and infirmities—even then the promise will not fail "Never!" When the cold chill of death creeps on, and friends can do no more, and you are starting on that journey from which there is no return—even then Christ will not forsake you. "Never!" When the day of judgment comes, and the books are opened and eternity is beginning—even then the promise will bear all your weight; Christ will not let go his hold on your soul.—J. C. Ryle.

Much of the unhappiness of this world arises from giving utterance to hasty, unkind words.

The Bereaved Parents.

FROM A LADY'S NOTE BOOK.

Once happy father, you need watch no more as you come from work for the pat and smile am of thy existence. The sweet face that made thy whole heart glow with parental love will never greet thee on earth again; the little cheek that was so often pressed to thine is now like marble in the icy hand of death; the heart that once beat with love's devotion has ceased its throbbing forever; the rosy mouth that would smile at a loving word or kind caress, or quiver at a harsh look or cold frown, is now indeed forever hushed; the restless fingers will trouble you no more; the little feet that were ever pattering about will never be heard again; and the clear, ringing laugh, echoing through the house, filling it with sweet melody, is now hushed for ever.

Never again will the childish tongue utter the sweet name of mother, and the ear that never before was deaf to thy loving voice takes no notice of it now. The little dresses will never more want an owner, for the form they were wont to robe, in all its graceful beauty, is soon to be laid down in the cold and silent tomb.

Put away the playthings, pick up the little half-worn shoes, bearing yet the imprint of the dear foot, a relic of the past, even to be watered with a mother's tears. Push back the curly locks, damp with the dews of death, that cluster in life like beauty around the marble brow. Gently close the pearly eyelids, with their long, silken lashes, over the glassy eyes, which, in life, shone with such laughing beauty. Tenderly straighten the scattered limbs, and press one more kiss on the childish face, every lineament of which is engraved on the heart; and as you take the last long, lingering look at the little form which, in life, had never known a single want, be thankful, in all your agony, that the child so dear to you had never, in all its life, like many others, felt the awful pangs of hunger gnawing at the childish heart, or felt the bitter cold freezing those little limbs.

Step for a moment into one of the alleys of our city; into this miserable house, up the creaking stairs, into this desolate home, where there is a mother watching by the death-bed of her first born: she loves it just as well as you loved yours, but no soft coverlet is thrown over it; its childish face is pressed against no downy pillow; its little form rests in no mahogany crib. Ah, no! far from it. The little one that has known nothing but cold and hunger, is lying now, in death, on a heap of straw in one corner of the room, with a tattered quilt for its only covering. The sweet little hands are calmly crossed on the tired little heart. The tiny feet are pinched with want, and the poor little body is nothing but a miserable frame of bones. The wretched mother thanks God, with tears streaming from her eyes, that He has called her little one home to where no temptation ever can assail it.

Oh, parents, when your little ones are called away before their young hearts are contaminated with sin or their minds have been led astray, cease your sorrow for a home of perfect peace, never to ask them back, for you know that if they had remained here, it would be impossible to conceive to what depths of woe and vice they might have fallen.

A Cheerful Heart.

"I love to see you coming. You are a gladness in the darkest hour—a perfect sunbeam." A merry or a cheerful countenance was one of the things Henry Taylor said his enemies could not take from him. There are some who spend their lives as if shut up in a dungeon—gloom and despondency ever on their faces, fretting and fault-finding ever on their lips. They mourn day by day, they have so little, and are in constant fear lest what they have should slip from their fingers. They never enjoy the good of to-day, for fear of the evil which may come. This is poor piety. "A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance." Religion must make the heart glad. When the true relation is established, and known between God and man, men must be happy in spite of themselves, and happiness in the heart will be reflected in the face.

There is enough to find fault with, if we have the disposition; there are thorns and thistles on every hand; there is a cross in every lot. We may be called to travel a weary road; but with a heart to praise God for his mercies, we may "make a joyful noise" unto him, and walk as in our appointed way in comfort and peace, even to the end of the journey.

Lonesomeness.

A mother, busy with her household cares, was obliged to go into an upper room, and leave two little ones alone for some time. So she gave them books and toys to amuse them, which answered very well for a time. But, by and by, the house seemed to grow so still and lonesome, they began to feel afraid. So the eldest went to the foot of the staircase, and calling with a timid voice, said: "Mamma, are you there?" "Yes, darling," said the mother, cheerily. "All right," said the little one, more to herself than to her mother. So she went back to her play for a time. After a while the question was repeated, with the same answer and the same result. Oh, how often in our loneliness and sadness here in the world, we forget that God is still overhead! But if we only send up our prayers to Him, we shall not fail to get a comforting and quieting answer. "What time I am afraid I will trust in Thee." You need not fear in the darkest night, or the wildest storm, for God is still overhead. "As one whom his mother comforteth," so the Lord will comfort those sorrowing ones who flee to his bosom for rest.—Presbyterian.

WANTS SUPPLIED.—A good man shall have what he needs, not always what he thinks he needs. Providence intends the supply of our necessities, but not of our desires. He will satisfy our wants, but not our wantonness. When a thing is not needful, a man cannot properly be said to want it; when it is needful, a good man shall not be without it. What is not bestowed upon us may not be so beautiful at that time wherein we desire it, for everything is beautiful in its season. He that did not want God's kindness to renew him shall never want God's kindness to supply him; his hand shall not be wanting to give where his heart has been so large in working.—Charnock.

Men and women make their own beauty or their own ugliness. Lord Lytton speaks in one of his novels of a man "who was uglier than he had any business to be;" and if he could but read it, every human being carries his life in his face, and is good-looking or the reverse, as that life has been good or evil. On our features the fine chisel of thought and emotion are eternally at work. Beauty is not the monopoly of blooming young men and of white and pink maidens. There is a slow-growing beauty, which only comes to perfection in old age. Grace belongs to no period of life, and goodness improves the longer it exists.

There cannot be greater treachery than first to raise confidence, and then to deceive it.

For the Companion.

Explanatory, to J. T. Meyers.

At the time I wrote the first article, in which occurred the language that ministers should not preach, "In the midst of life we are in death," I apprehended no opposition. I supposed my brethren to be in this, like in many other respects, like myself—ready to catch, or borrow, ideas expressed by another, or some maxims in use and preached, like the one above, which is only found in a hymn of a Lutheran hymn book, and so long in use that many are ready to preach it for Bible wording, without due examination by divine revelation, —the criterion by which all our words, and acts must be tested,—and after doing so for some time, we stop no more to take a second thought whether right or wrong, until some one calls our attention to it, when our mistake at once appears clear to us. I did not suppose, for a moment, that any one would attempt to sustain an idea so groundless, after taking a second thought, that the end of life comes not at the time of death, whether old or young. I mean the scriptural import of death. Dieth, in the language of Job, only denotes that death will take place at some time. Death cannot take place unless a man dies; hence the word death may properly be made use of to denote that death is taking place.

Brother M. says, "There are brethren who become so much confirmed in their own peculiar views, that were they to believe otherwise from the productions of the mind of an unsurpassed logic, would not yield as to the least, and if the latter were demonstrated to them in the most rigid analysis of language." In this, no doubt, brother M. means to say to the readers of his production, that, if he fails to convert me from the view that in the midst of life we are not in death, it is only owing to my being one of that class of brethren. But brother M. fails to see that there is equally as much room, by an impartial decision, to arrive at the conclusion that he is not entirely exempt from the same fate. Dear brother M., let us be careful; God knows the design of our productions that are thrown broadcast before the world, through our periodicals.

In my first article brother M. is left to conjecture; and in his conjectures he forms wrong conclusions, and begs leave to differ with me. In the second he became confounded at my remarks, and thinks I made them to baffle away the strength of his arguments. I see no arguments, much less strength of argument, in either first or last of his articles, touching the part of my article, "Both old and young die at the end of life."

Brother M. admits that the expression, "In the midst of life we are in death," is not a scriptural wording. I ask him therefore, why are you alarmed about it? The truth is not suffering. You should not be so hasty in charging me with so much weakness, shortsightedness, human hastiness, and rashness, (see the words "Human precipitancy,") and try to make it appear in your article as if I had denied a part of the truth of the Bible; claiming that, if I did not, you frankly acklowledged yourself ignorant of "scriptural phraseology," which by a more thorough examination of the scriptures, you may find to be true, at least, to a certain extent.

Physiology I did not say anything against. I believe it to be right, as a science, and one with which we should all be somewhat familiar; but it does not answer to prove very strongly that the death of which we speak comes in the midst of life. But we will try brother M's. manner of reasoning, as he claims, from the science of physiology. He says: "Every effort and every movement kills some portion of the muscles employed; every thought, even, involves the death of some particle of the brain." The child, as soon as it is born into the world, is as much a total human organism as brother M. or myself, only not mentally and physically developed as we are. Now, does brother M. mean to teach us that, according to the course of nature, every effort or movement the babe makes from the time it is born "kills some portion of the muscles employed," and that "every thought involves the death of some particle of the brain?" If he means to show us, by reasoning from a physical standpoint, that such is the fate of the human organism, if such is the power of his philosophy, then I would ask again, when and how does this wasting away of which he speaks, take place in the human race? Does it take place in the beginning of life, or in the middle? or at what age of the human organism does it commence? If in early life, how, then, does the human body grow, and become of full size? and how do our organs enlarge, our muscles become strong, our brain increase, our susceptive powers expand, so that, not alone physically, but also mentally, by the proper cultivation or training of our faculties, we may become useful men and women? According to brother M's. way of reasoning, it could not be so; we would have to be on the decline of life, from the time we are born into the world; at least that class of human beings just growing up into manhood and the vigor of life, and until their vital powers commence to fail, would only be liable to die at the end of life, the very class of which it is generally said if they die, "How true it is, that in the midst of life we are in death." But that class, who, in the decline of life end their days, may have died, according to your manner of reasoning, physiologically, in the midst of life. Is this consistent? Reader, judge for yourself. Brother M. makes use of some Greek and Latin terms in his articles. I am an old fashioned scholar, and, no doubt, something like many of the readers of the COMPANION, understand simple, common language the best. I have books containing high words, but make no use of them, except in making out prescriptions to druggists for medicine.

I will joyfully hear what Job says: "Man dieth and wasteth away." But Job does not say one word, that man dieth in the midst of life; neither does he hold forth the idea; but he means to teach us, that man cannot always live here, but must die. If there is any weight of evidence as to the time when death takes place, it is as I claimed and still claim, at the end of life, and not in the midst.—This is evident from his language following, "His days are determined, his months are numbered, and thou hast appointed his bounds which he cannot pass." But we know that man through intemperance in various ways, may subject himself to death long before that time.

Brother Meyers cites us to different passages of the Bible. One is, "Be not overmuch wicked, neither be thou foolish; for why shouldst thou die before thy time?" Next the Psalmist's language, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." These passages, in connection with the language of Job, already treated upon, it seems to me, frame the great master-wheel of Biblical phraseology, by which brother Meyers is carried along with the idea that "In the midst of life we are in death." But, dear reader, I think by what I have said from the language of Job, you discover that it does not answer to sustain his position, but is rather against him. The language of the Psalmist, and of the prophet named by brother Meyers is synonomous in meaning. Under the Mosaic Law, the man that was overmuch wicked, and broke some parts of the law, had to die without mercy. Such was the case with the adulterer, the man-slayer, the Sabbath breaker, &c., no difference had they lived out half their days or not. No doubt the adulterous woman that was brought to Christ was guilty of death, as well as the thief on the cross. What his age was, I know not; one thing I do know, his life was brought to an end, and he died at the end of life. Thus may bloody and deceitful men not live out half their days, under our or any other law. When executed there is an end of life by sudden death. If brother Meyers re-reads and applies properly by the passages he referred to, to prove his position, he will at once discover that they have not been intended to sustain the idea that in the midst of life we are in death.

But brother Meyers claims that, upon the grounds that "in the midst of life we are in death" is philosophical, we can preach it. Paul says, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after traditions of men;" from which we are forced to believe that Paul does not sanction that kind of reasoning.

Secondly, Brother Meyers claims that brethren differ, because "they can not see alike," which he assigns as a reason that Brethren should not preach alike upon topics of this kind, and means to say, therefore we can preach, "In the midst of life we are in death." How does brother Meyers expect we will ever see alike unless we look through the same telescope—the Gospel?

Thirdly, Brother Meyers reasons, from the grounds that we need not have a thus saith the Lord for all we preach. Notice his language, "Is his preaching of a 'thus saith the Lord,' and nothing more?" As evidence to sustain his assertion he refers us to Paul, when he preached, not of commandment, but by permission, and asks, "Are we more righteous than St. Paul?" Paul spoke by permission, through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, as the Lord directed, and permitted him—If brother Meyers or myself are inspired, then, and not till then, can we speak forth the former hidden things of God, like a Paul did; and yet he emphatically declared, that what he preached was not after man, "For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Where is our permission to preach anything outside of what we have a thus saith the Lord for? "I Paul, charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word." And again, "I am determined to know nothing amongst you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." And Paul said his preaching was "In demonstration of the Spirit and power." He claimed not these words of wisdom, and physiology, and philosophy, in his preaching, although I believe he had as much knowledge of them as sciences, as brother Meyers or myself, if not more. But he only made use of the human organism to illustrate to his brethren the joint labors, the compactness, and union of the body of Christ, the Church. See Rom: 12. 4–8; also, 1 Cor. 12; Eph. 9: 21–31. God forbid that we should preach anything outside of what we have a "Thus saith the Lord for." Let us build upon the prophets and apostles, and Jesus Christ the chief corner stone.

Come, brother Meyers, you said you purposed coming to me, God willing, either to instruct or be instructed. I would then say to you in love, if you have no other reasons why we can preach that "in the midst of life we are in death," than those conveyed in the two last points under consideration,—because we cannot see alike, and that we can preach that for which we have not a thus saith the Lord,—let it drop to the ground and make use of your time and talents in writing upon something that you have a thus saith the Lord to sustain you with, which is far more pleasant and useful. What you have said in your last to sustain your position,—"In the midst of life we are in death"—rather served to prove that man is subject to death, which is not at all the point at issue; for we all fully agree in this, that man, born of a woman, is liable to death, regardless of person, standing, or age.

We will now notice what we are to understand by the term death, and when it takes place. Webster's rendering of the word death is as follows: "The extinction of life." Now if Webster's definition of the word midst was good and sufficient ground for brother Meyers to reason upon, why not also at the same time examine him upon the word death, and save all his trouble of writing? Paul gives us the scriptural meaning of death, and also when it takes place. He said he became dead to sin, and was made alive unto righteousness. I ask you, Paul, when did this death take place with you? Was it in the midst of your sinful life? I want you, Paul, to answer this disputed question yourself. "Why, I, Paul, made that as plain as language can make it in Romans, 6th and 7th chapters. There I told you, 'He that is dead is freed from sin.' I admonished you to reckon yourselves 'to be dead indeed unto sin and alive unto God.' I have told you, that we who are dead to sin live no longer therein. I have also told you that 'Christ died unto sin once,' 'and you all know when and where that took place, that it was at the end, when all was fulfilled but to die,' and he bowed his head and gave up the ghost.' I have also told you, that the woman is bound by the law to her husband while he liveth; but when he is dead she is free from that law. I have also shown unto my brethren that were under the law, that you became dead to the law by the body of Christ, who is the end of the law, and died at the end, that you should be married to another, to him who is raised from the dead. Again, 'He that is dead, has ceased from sin,'" and many other passages of scripture which I will not name now, in which it is demonstrated to us 'by the most rigid analysis of language,' that death, or the word death always denotes the end of a life, let that be when our spirit is separated from the body and the ghost is surrendered. James saith, "The body without the spirit is dead;" and the Bible everywhere throughout its pages holds forth the idea, that a man's life always did consist in the number of days he lived, and when they ended, the Bible says, "He died," having lived or reigned so long, as the case was.

Now brother Meyers, this is the language of the Bible, and your weak brother's strong convictions of the truth of it. Now, for the truth's sake, as it stands upon the pages, I would say to you, beg no longer leave to differ with me, but meet me at home in the Bible, and we shall see alike, and all be of one mind, and all speak the same thing. Our ideas, maxims, and traditions, may sometimes be true, but unless they are supported with reliable testimony, they are like brilliant soap bubbles, which a child's breath will disperse. So with the maxim that "In the midst of life we are in death," it is vanished out of the Bible, and out of reason; for it is morally impossible to be in death in the midst of life. Paul, when he stopped sinning became dead to sin, totally inactive in the life of sin. Here we find death again the end of life, if brother Meyers is still ready to teach otherwise, he can have it his way, I shall not trouble him any longer. What I have written I have written in love to the truth, and to my brethren and sisters, who love the truth as it is contained in the word of God, whom I hope to meet in the kingdom of immortal glory. Amen.

Drunkenness a Crime.

Drunkenness from the use of intoxicating liquors, almost any one will admit is a crime before God, and a grievous sin against society. The drunkard and the drunkard-maker stand on the same level. The former must be looked upon as an enemy to good society, by his precept and example tending to ruin the young, poison their minds, and drag them down on a level with himself. The designs and emotions being the offspring of the soul, it follows that the man whose highest aspiration is to gratify a morbid appetite, either for liquor or tobacco, must have a soul correspondingly mean and low, and therefore not a fit companion for the good and pure in mind and heart.

We pity the drunkard-maker. The curse of God is pronounced against him, and it is upon him even in this life. With all the gains from his unholy traffic, prosperity rarely attends him. We say confidently, that none can carry their hatred of strong drink to excess, and too strongly oppose the fearful tide sweeping over our land and carrying before it thousands and hundreds of thousands of the young men, middle aged men, old men, and even maidens, to this fearful end—a drunkard's doom. The avenues that lead to this destruction are vast and many. Home-made wine is a demon in angel's guise, and is constantly luring men and women to destruction. You, who have domestic wines, and give them to your friends and neighbors for their entertainment and gratification, beware! There will be a fearful reckoning with professing Christians, who have thus tempted their friends and are thereby the means, as might be the case, of their eternal damnation. The Bible positively affirms, without modification, that "no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God." "The Law will not spurn him; but the anger of the Lord * * * * shall smoke against that man and all the curses that are written in this Book shall lie upon him, and the Lord shall blot out his name from under heaven."

BOELUS.

Home Reading.

One of the most pleasant and noble duties of the head of the family is to furnish its members with good reading. In the times which are passed it was considered enough to clothe and feed and shelter a family. This was the sum of parental duty; but lately it has been found out that wives and children have minds, and so it has become a necessity to educate the children and furnish reading for the whole household; it has been found out that the mind wants its food as well as the body, and that it wants to be sheltered from the pitiless storms of error and vice by the guarding and friendly roof of intelligence and virtue.

An ignorant family in our day is an antiquated institution. It smells of the musty past; it is a dark spot which the light of the modern sun of intelligence has not reached.

Let good reading go into a home and the very atmosphere of that home gradually changes. It becomes clearer, purer, more cheerful, healthful and happy; the boys begin to grow ambitious; to talk about men, places, principles, books, the past and the future; the girls begin to feel a new life opening to them in knowledge, duty and pleasure; and so the family changes, and out from its number will go intelligent men and women to fill honorable places and be useful members of the community. Let the torch of intelligence be lit in every household; let the old and young vie with each other in introducing new and useful topics of investigation, and in cherishing a love of reading, study and improvement. Where was Christ Born?

My attention has been drawn to the above query, of late, inasmuch that I have been prompted to write a few lines for the COMPANION, for the consideration of those who may be cherishing wrong impressions, gathered, perhaps, in their childhood, from Dr. Watts' Cradle Hymn, picture books, &c. The impressions gathered in childhood are so lasting as to become established facts with us in after years. So it is with many (the Brethren not excepted) in regard to the birth place of Christ. Some are under the impression, that it is positively declared in the New Testament that Christ was born in a stable; others tell us that the wise men of the East and the shepherds were the same characters, and I have heard ministering Brethren say, that the shepherds were guided by a star to where the young child lay; also, that the wise men of the East, found him wrapped in swaddling clothes, and lying in a manger. Not feeling myself gifted in argument, I would merely say to those who hold such opinions, "Search the scriptures, and see whether these things are so." Let us be careful, Brethren, when expounding the scriptures, that we are not giving our own impressions instead of the word of God, even in small matters.

The Best Teacher.

He teaches best who best doth learn:
We give what we receive;
We cannot give unless we get—
Let none their hearts deceive.

He teaches best who best doth pray:
Enriched by prayer we give:
Our cries and tears bring down the rain
Which makes the seed to live

He teaches best who best doth live;
'Tis thus the truth we know;
The power which living hearts doth win,
From earnest lives must flow.

He teaches best who best doth love;
This quickens, yet controls;
This grace must live and reign in those Whose aim is to win souls.

He teaches best who best doth show
The merits of Christ's death:
Through those kind words true love doth glow
And breathe in every breath.

Religion an Adornment to the Youth.

BY J. S. FLORY.

Religion is an adornment to the character at any period of life: but in the young it has a peculiar and striking charm. Literary attainments, good breeding, courteousness, and such qualifications are commendable in the young; but all these, with many other good qualities, do not give that lovely tone and shining mark to the young man and young woman that is given by the religion of Jesus. All other endowments of the mind and character, without religion, are gold without the shine, or beauty without light. To any other good and needful qualifications in life, religion gives the crowning master finish. Religion molds literary attainments aright; directs the will in its proper course; tempers the disposition as it should be, and, in fact, makes the possessor a worthy character in every respect for the diversified stations of this life, and fits him for eternal life. Even to person, religion adds a charm. Beauty without religion is a rose without sweet fragrance: it will do to look at from a distance, but on a near approach the "mold beneath the rose" is discoverable. But beauty with religion is the more to be admired the nearer you approach it, and even the "unhandsome" are to be admired when the glow and color of religion is seen to shine from within. Believe it young men and young women, religion adds such charms to character, that all else, such as "gaining" and putting pomade and hair-dressing and the like, sinks into nothingness. All that you may learn in the high-courts of fashion to make you fascinating or attractive, is nothing, in comparison to what you may learn at the feet of Jesus, to make you objects of love and admiration in the eyes of all sensible people. All the adornments of art, fashioned from the dust of gold, from coral beds, from diamonds, highest gem, can never stir within the bosom of man or woman such depths of love and admiration as the pure graces of that religion which plucks from heaven's royal wardrobe, garments of splendor that outshine the magnificence of sun, moon, and stars. A meek and humble spirit, that feels the living of that crimson flood from Calvary, is something that attracts our attention, and calls forth our highest regards. Where shall we look for a picture to fill our admiring mind with pleasure? Shall it be in the painter's gallery? No, not there. Shall it be amid the dazzling splendors of artistic glow? No, not there. Shall it be to the fond mother caressing her darling babe? That is beautiful, but no, not there. Shall it be to the arch bow spaning the heavens, or to the shining constellations in the upper deep? No, no, not there. But to here: a young maid kneeling at the foot of the cross, and learning of Jesus! FAITH as a radiant light, encircles her heart. HOPE, an anchor to her soul is there, and LOVE, ah, how it sheds sweet music all around! Be silent, earth, and listen heavens, here we have found a centre for our highest admiration, and a prototype of the centre of perfection.

Never be idle; if your hands cannot be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind.

Always speak the truth.

Make few promises. Live up to your engagements.

Keep your own secrets, if you have any.

When you speak to a person, look him in the face.

Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue.

If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that none will believe him.

Drink no kind of intoxicating liquor.

Never live (Unfortune excepted) within your means.

When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day.

Take no house to be rich, if you would prosper.

Small and steady gains give competency with tranquillity of mind.

Never play at any game of chance.

Avoid temptation, through fear you may not withstand it.

Trusting the Promises.

When a pious old slave on a Virginia plantation was asked why he was always so sunny-hearted and cheerful under his hard lot, he replied: "Ah! massa, I always lays flat down on de promises, and den I pray straight up to my hebenly Father."

Humble, happy soul! he was not the first man who has eased an aching head by laying it upon God's pillows; or the first man who has risen up the stronger from a repose on the unchangeable word of God's love. Spiritually, that man was a Cresus, for all his soul's wealth was in the currency of heaven. If you take a Bank of England note to the counter of the bank, in an instant that bit of paper turns to gold. If we take a promise of God to the mercy-seat, it turns to what is better than gold—to our own good and the glory of our Father.

Let woman wash her hands of all participation in the customs of social drinking, and let her wear the frown of absolute refusal to enter life's partnership with those who cannot second her example, and she will have accomplished a reform mightier than ever followed the scourging of pen or platform, or weapons of war.

Charity has an eternal debt, and without kind.

A Christian's Parting Words.

BY LOVINE H. BURKHART.

AIR:—The Dying Californian.

Mother, I have fondly loved thee,
And am loth to leave thee now;
But my Heavenly Father calls me;
To his will I meekly bow.
Yes, he calls me, I must leave you,
Father, mother, kindred dear:
Never more my form will greet you,
But in heaven; so meet me there.

You have loved me, mother, dearly,
But with Jesus I'll be blest,
Where no sickness, grief, nor sorrow
Ever can disturb my rest.
You have loved me, oh, so fondly
And with you I fain would stay;
But, dear mother, who can tell the Troubles of a long delay.

Brothers, sisters, cease your weeping;
Do not grieve for me so sore;
For while 'neath the sod I'm sleeping,
I am free forevermore.
You will miss me, well I know it,
Miss me from your heart and home;
But in this low world, so gloomy,
I could wish no more to roam.

Mothers, yet I fain would tarry
Thee to cheer in coming years;
But, since God is sweetly calling,
Mother wipe away your tears.
Father, mother, when I'm sleeping,
Lay your treasures up in heaven;
Earth has no abiding city:
Here no hope to meet is given.

But we all may meet in heaven;
Parting there is known no more;
There is joy, and peace, and brightness
'Mong the saints who've gone before.
Father, mother, friends so lovely,
Long fare-well, I must be gone;
Shed no tear of bitter sorrow;
Heaven's my eternal home.

Good-by, friends, I now must leave you,
Jesus calls me, I must go;
Yes, he calls, and I must answer;
Farewell all my friends below.
Farewell, all my friends, I'm going.
Meet me where we'll part no more;
Then we'll bid adieu to sorrow—
Sing God's praise on Canaan's shore.

A celebrated writer says that if one could read it, every human being carries his life in his face, and is good looking or the reverse, as that life has been good or evil.

How We are Saved.

BY REV. A. J. GORDON.

When in the darkness of the midnight train, the conductor's lamp is seen glimmering through the car, does he hold it to your face to learn who you are, in order to be satisfied of your right to proceed? No! he lets its beams fall on the ticket which you hold out to him, and if that is right you are right, no matter who you are, whether rich or poor, whether rude or noble. Christ, and Christ alone, is our passport to glory. Never can we say, "O Lord, look upon me, for I am holy." Always must we say, rather, "Behold, O God, our shield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed." And ever since that face dropped pale and gory on his breast with that dying sentence, "It is finished," God has only to look upon it to justify any sinner, however guilty, who looks upon it also in a trusting faith. Believest thou this, my heart? Or is pride setting you to the hopeless task of self-redemption, putting you to gazing upon some thin transfiguration of self, to find a ground work for confidence and trust.

But many are beguiled away from the simplicity that is in Christ by a false humanity. Unworthy? Most assuredly you are. And if you lived to be the veriest saint, you will be so still. And that is the reason why God has chosen to save you by one who is worthy. It is not a question of what you deserve, but what Christ deserves. And for you to refuse to take the place which God assigned you in redemption, because of a sense of unfitness, that is not humility, but unbelief. It is putting self in the place of the cross. And that is always to set aside Christ. I care not whether it be a proud self or an humble self; a self righteous self or a self condemning self; the moment you put it in the place of the cross, you throw the atonement into eclipse, and Christ is made of none effect to you.

The Gospel stipulates to take men at their worst or at their best and it matters little which. It has to do the same work for both. You know it costs our government just as much to uniform a well dressed recruit as it does a ragged one. In either case the recruit must put off his citizen's dress and put on the army blue.—And so it is not worth while for a volunteer to spend his labor and pains to get a new suit to enlist in. There is likewise no necessity for a sinner's waiting to get a better moral garb, a more respectable wardrobe of frames and feelings, before he may come to Christ. For in any event he must put off the old man with his dress, and put on the Lord Jesus Christ, who of God is made unto him wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption.

Roman Catholic.

The following are the statistics of the minor Roman Catholic missions in the East, as recently published by the French Catholic Missionary Society: China: In the provinces of Su-Tchuen, Yun, Nan, and Trouy-tcheu there were, in 1822, 1 apostolic vicar, coadjutor bishop, 1 European missionary and 15 native priests, 1 college, and 60,000 Christians; in 1872, 5 bishops, 78 European missionaries, 79 native priests, 7 colleges, 134 schools, 21 orphanages, and 108,500 Christians. (2.) In Tong-King, in 1822, there were 1 apostolic vicar, 4 missionaries, 90 native priests, 3 colleges, and 150,000 Christians; in 1872, in the same province, 3 bishops. 32 missionaries, 121 native priests, 4 colleges, 6 orphanages, and 210,000 Christians. (3.) In Cochin China, in 1822, there were 1 apostolic vicar, 3 missionaries, 20 native priests, 2 colleges, and 80,000 Christians; in 1872, 5 bishops, 65 missionaries, 71 native priests, 4 colleges, and 102,538 Christians. (4.) Kingdom of Siam, in 1822, 1 vicar apostolic, 3 missionaries, 5 priests, 3,000 Christians; in 1872, 2 bishops, 34 missionaries, 5 native priests, 2 colleges, 30 school; 5 orphanages, 18,500 Christians. (5) Pondichery and Coromandel, in 1822, 1 vicar apostolic, 6 missionaries, 8 native priests, and 50,000 Christians. in 1872, 3 bishops, 69 missionaries, 38 native priests, 7 colleges, 92 schools, 6 orphanages, and 170,000 Christians. In fifty years, therefore, their missions have increased by 5 bishops, 216 missionaries, 176 native priests, 12 colleges, 436 schools, 39 orphanages, and 266,538 Christians. Added to those that previously existed, give the following result; 18 bishops, 278 missionaries, 311 native priests, 24 colleges, 436 schools, 39 orphanages and 609,538 Christians.

Personal Annals.

Selected by S. Z. SHARP.

Some people have a habit, whether it be in conversation or more public talk, of thursting bits of their own personal history into whatever they say, forgetting that not one person in ten thousand cares a rush for the information. But when one of these vain-glorious characters comes to be an editor, don't his readers get "posted" in personal annals! He is the sort of editor so well photographed by Warner, in the CHRISTIAN UNION. A good many of the first class newspapers of the country have emancipated themselves from this weak, and self-conscious, and conceited use of the "We." Am I mistaken, in thinking that a good many of the religious journals are very provincial and ludicrous examples of it? It seems to be difficult for the clergyman who has come into editorial life to curb and ride the "We" without showing that he is mounted on a sharp-backed and high-trotting nag. It is known when We have been on a journey;" when "We spent the Sunday at Gilgal, and preached morning and evening in the church there;" and "on Monday, Deacon Gross hitched up his mare, which he slyly remarked was unwilling to let grass grow under her feet even going to meeting on Sunday, and whirled us rapidly over the hills to Ramoth, where we preached to an immense concourse of people eager to hear," etc.—The Christian.

The Moab Excavation.

A late letter-writer from Jerusalem gives some account of the results of the excavations now being made in Moab. About six hundred articles, such as earthenware jars, lamps, figures of men and animals, inscribed slabs etc., have been safely lodged in Jerusalem, and some of them are of the highest interest. The jars are large, somewhat rude in construction, and chiefly valuable for the writing with which they are covered. In some instances the characters are stamped, in others engraved with a sharp instrument, while a third sort is in strong relief and may have been molded or first formed of wet clay and then stuck on. The letters are mostly Phœnician, some are "Nabathen," and others again are characters of unknown origin. Some are thought to represent Moloch, having a cavity in the capacious abdomen, and hollow space, perhaps for fire, underneath. Many of these antiques are the Phallic emblems. Among miscellaneous articles are knives, hands, small lamps, a horse-shoe of the European pattern, and a great number of medallions of various shapes and sizes.—Daily Times.

Dying at the Top.

Quite a number of prominent railroad men are mentioned as being obliged to retire for a time at least, some going to Europe; their brain being affected by too long and excited attention to business. It is the bane of our business men. They are doing too much. They must take things moderately, or go by the board.

It is next to impossible to make any man sensible of his own need of the care and caution that he would commend to his neighbor. "All men think all men mortal but themselves." And every man thinks he can endure a strain that he knows would brake down any two men of whom he was not one. At the very time when he is feeling the best, doing his work with the greatest possible zest, freshness, energy and success, the crisis is coming. At the top of its bent the bow snaps, and the man is a wreck. He goes to Europe to find his wits, but they are not there. He comes home, and they are not here. He is a "used up man."

The moral of this is: be moderate in business. In getting riches or honors, take care of your health so as to enjoy your gettings. For it is better to retire with a competency and health, than to become very rich with softening of the brain.

The Cock and the Dinner Pot.

One night after Mr. Dow had retired to bed, after a hard day's travel in the western part of Virginia, a number of persons collected in the bar room to enjoy their usual revelries, as was the custom in that part of the country. At a late hour in the night the alarm was given that one of the company had lost his pocket book, and a search proposed.—Whereupon the landlord remarked, that Lorenza Dow was in the house, and that if the money was there, he knew that Lorenza could find it. The suggestion was instantly received with approbation, and accordingly Mr. Dow was aroused from his slumber and brought forth to find the money. As he entered the room, his eyes ran through the company with searching inquiry, but nothing appeared that could fix guilt upon any one. The loser appeared with countenance expressive of great concern, and sought Mr. Dow for heaven's sake to find him his money.

"Have any left the company since you lost your money?" said Mr. Dow.

"None," said the loser, "none."

"Then," said Lorenzo, turning to the landlady, "go and bring me your large dinner pot."

This created no little surprise, but as supernatural powers were universally conceded, his directions were unhesitatingly obeyed. Accordingly the pot was brought forward, and set in the middle of the room.

"Now," said Lorenza, "go and bring the old chicken cock from the roost."

This was also done, and at Lorenzo's directions the cock was put into the pot and covered over with a board or lid.

"Let the doors now be fastened, and the lights extinguished," said Mr. Dow; which was also done.—"Now," said he, "every person in the room must rub his hands hard against the pot, and when the guilty hands touch, the cock will crow." Accordingly all came forward and rubbed, or pretended to rub, against the pot. But no cock crew. "Let the candles now be lighted said Lorenzo, there is no guilty person here; if the man ever had any money, he must have lost it some place else. But stop," said Lorenzo, when all things were prepared, "let us now examine the hands." This was the important part of his arrangement; for on examination it was found that one man had not rubbed against the pot. The other's hands being black with the soot of the pot was a proof of their innocence. "There," said Lorenzo, pointing to the man with clean hands, "there is the man who picked your pocket." The culprit seeing his detection at once acknowledged his guilt and gave up the money.

J. R. HOCHSTETLER.

There is no policy like politeness; and a good manner is the best thing in the world, either to get a good name or to supply the want of it.

It is probably more innocent to laugh, at a theatre, at the foibles of imaginary characters than to find pleasure in ridiculing, at a tea-table, the weakness of real ones.—Anon.

DALE CITY, PA., Nov. 19, 1872.

Editor's Diary.

FRIDAY, 8th was spent in Pittsburg, looking after a Stereotyping apparatus, and testing a new invention for that purpose. Found it all that could be expected, and consequently purchased a complete outfit. Therefore we shall shortly be prepared to do work of all kinds requiring stereotyping. We consider this a valuable acquisition to our office.

SATURDAY, 9th. Returned home by the noon train, in company with Miss Eliza Beachly and her brother Milton, and several other young folks, on their return from Mt. Union College.

SUNDAY, 10th. Did not attend forenoon meeting; but served at Sunday-school. Brother Beer preached to us in the evening. His discourse was especially directed to the unconverted.

Of the other days of the week we shall not make special notes, although we would have had abundant to write out pages. But we were kept so busy in getting out the first number of the Dale City Record, that we could not bestow the regular attention to the COMPANION, our Record editor having special business to take him to St. Louis. The same reason has also delayed our paper from catching up the lost time. Next week we hope to be all right.

The weather has quite materially changed here. It is now quite cold, with the ground nearly covered with snow.

Now Ready.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1873 is now ready for delivery, and those ordered will be sent in a few days.

It contains, beside the Almanac department, a biographical sketch of Martin Urner, sr., Martin Urner, Jr., Michael Frantz; Church and Family Chronicles. A Biography of the Brotherhood in western Pennsylvania, Western Maryland, and Western Virginia; Preaching instead of Dancing; History of the Brethren in Lancaster county, Pa., and other interesting reading matter, all for ten cents, or 75 cents for a dozen, sent postpaid.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

Another box of 189 copies of Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book has been received and sent out to our patrons and still our orders are not supplied, by 106 copies. The surest way of getting the books is to have your orders entered, and they will be sent in the rotation in which they occur.

The News From Maine.

We are in receipt of Correspondence from the Maine Mission, but it arrived too late for insertion in this Number. It dates up to the 9th inst. They landed safely at Skowhegan, on the 7th, and met a hearty reception. At the time of writing they had already preached several sermons. They were enjoying good health.

The report will appear in our next.

Illustrated Christian Weekly.

We always find something of more than ordinary interest within the bright pages of our ILLUSTRATED CHRISTIAN WEEKLY. Two weeks ago it gave us, among other good things, the finest portrait, on wood, of Henry Ward Beecher, ever published. This week it gives a touching picture illustrating a common phase of city life entitled, "The Lost Child;" Westminister Abbey sights in three engravings; a home picture, "This Little Piggy went to Market;" an illustration of "Black Water-Hens," and a comical sketch showing the derangement produced in one branch of business by too close attention to politics. John S. C. Abbott begins one of his fascinating histories entitled, "William the Conqueror," to be completed in about two months. A very important article is the report of Anthony Comstock, showing what one man has done to suppress the trade in licentious literature in New York city during one year.

A Plain and Scriptural View of Baptism.

BY "THE REV." DANIEL BAKER, D. D., OF TEXAS.

"The case of Philip and the Eunuch is thought strongly to favor the doctrine of restricting baptism to immersion. I think differently! But let us examine the case. The passage reads thus: "And as they went on their way, they came to a certain water." How vague this language! It is not said a river. It could not be, for there is no river there! It may have been only a streamlet, or shallow pool, such as is common in the prairies of Texas. But to proceed: And the eunuch said: "See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" This is just precisely what a traveller in similar circumstances would now say, if on his way to San Antonia, he should come to the Cibola, and see by the roadside, what I have seen, a place scooped out by the hand of nature where travellers usually water their horses. And I am confirmed in the correctness of this opinion, by the fact, that the region through which the eunuch was passing is in the south country, called "desert;" and in latitude, in soil, in climate, and face of the country, is very much the same as the region of the Cibola, some sixteen miles east of San Antonia. What said he? "See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" How natural this language, at the sight of any water, much or little! Observe! he had just been reading that prediction concerning the Messiah:—"He shall sprinkle many nations." "Of whom," says the eunuch, "speaketh the prophet this? Of himself, or some other? And Philip began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." The eunuch, believing Christ to be the Messiah predicted, desired, as an evidence of his faith, to be sprinkled in his name. * * For neither in this prophecy, nor any other touching the Messiah, is it predicted that he should immerse, but that he should sprinkle. Of course, then, the eunuch expected to be sprinkled and not immersed; hence he did not wait until he came to a river, but as soon as he saw water, he immediately proposed to have the element applied to him in the mode and form predicted."

REMARKS.

The above extract from the work bearing the same title, was transcribed and handed us by brother Dan'l Snowberger, of New Enterprise, Pa. Is it not an astounding production? But it is not more astounding than false. False, we say, because the author must have known, while he penned it, that he was putting words into the mouth of the inspired penman. Hear him. He says. "Observe! he had just been reading the prediction concerning the Messiah, 'He shall sprinkle many nations.' 'Of whom, says the eunuch, 'speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other?' 'And Philip began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." How any man, and especially one who displays the titles of Rev. and D. D., can have the unblushing audacity to give expression to such a wilful and palpable falsehood is more than we can decipher. But so it is, and the best we can do is, to expose his shameless sophistry. That the reader may see it more clearly, we will put the D. D's version into one column and the word of God into another.

"Observe! he had just been reading the prediction concerning the Messiah: 'He shall sprinkle many nations.' 'Of whom,' says the eunuch, 'speaketh the prophet this? of himself or of some other?' 'And Philip began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.' "—Baker.

"The place in the scripture which he read was this: He was led as a sheep to the slaughter: and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away; and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth. And the eunuch answered Philip and said, Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture and preached unto him Jesus." Acts 8:32-34 See Is. 53:7-8.

Comment is unnecessary, as the contrast sufficiently expresses the error. But be it remembered, that the language of the prophet, "He shall sprinkle many nations," does not occur in the same chapter in which the scripture is found which the evangelist says the eunuch was reading, and from which Philip began to preach unto him Jesus. Neither is there any intimation that he had read anything about sprinkling, nor that Philip had said anything whatever about it. These facts notwithstanding the author speaks as positively as if he were quoting the words of inspiration. ! Words cannot express our astonishment.

ANOTHER CONTRAST.

"The eunuch, believing Christ to be the very Messiah predicted, desired an evidence of his faith, to be sprinkled in his name."—Rev. Daniel Baker, D. D

"And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, see, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?"—Acts 8:36.

What harmony! We will pass this also without comment. In fact, the entire selection is of the same quality, and perhaps the most prudent way would be to treat it with silent contempt; but we will yet notice what he says in reference to the sentence, "They came to a certain water." He says, "How vague this language." Not so very vague after all, we think. If it should read, "They came to water," it would seem somewhat vague; if it should read, "They came to a water," ninety-nine out of every hundred impartial readers would understand it to mean a stream of water; and saying, "They came to a certain water," conveys the same idea in more definite terms. We are sure of this. So certain are we, that we venture the assertion, if a traveler, in giving an account of his journey, should say he "came to a certain water," not one of a thousand would dream of his meaning anything else than a stream of water; and one, too, that is worthy of notice. Even the author of the foregoing selection is not an exception. Every school boy in our land would so understand it. This being the case, we see no room for talking about [illegible]. The vagueness is in the mind of the reader and not in the sentence, "They came unto a certain water."

The eunuch said, 'Here is water what doth hinder me to be baptized?' Of this our author says, "This is just precisely what a traveler in similar circumstances would now say, if on his way to San Antonio, he should come to the Cibolo, and see by the road-side what I have seen—a place scooped out by the hands of nature where travelers usually water their horses." No, sir, we object: those travelers who believe in immersion would say precisely as the eunuch did; but such as would prefer sprinkling, would say precisely as the author did when he represented the eunuch as desiring, "as an evidence of his faith, to be sprinkled in his name"—the name of Jesus.

The evangelist says, "They went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him." If our author had written the history, he would have said, They both went down to the water, and Philip sprinkled him." How different the two readings!

The inspired Penman said, "And when they were come up out of the water." The Texian author would have written, "When they had returned from the water." To make the case of Philip and the eunuch favor sprinkling the evangelist's account must be revised and considerably changed. As long as it stands as it now does, it strongly favors immersion; and when we take into consideration the meaning of the words baptisthenai, ebaptisen, it not only favors immersion but unmistakably teaches that Philip immersed the eunuch.

News and Meditations.

WEDNESDAY, Oct., 9th. Attended the funeral of Mrs. Horner. At about 3 P. M., we left the house for the place of interment, which was the Union Grave-yard, half a mile from Conemaugh. After the funeral sermon we buried the body by the side of her little babe, which was buried a few days before; then returned home with this thought upon our mind, that, as they are now, so we must be. She was a member of the disciple church.

SUNDAY, 13*th.* Meeting in the Union Meeting-house at 10 A. M. Pretty full board of preachers, but rather a small congregation of hearers.—Brother Joseph S. Burkhart preached for us from the words, "Repent ye and believe the gospel.

SUNDAY, 20*th*, Meeting at two places at 10 A. M. For our part we were alone, at the Union meeting house. Congregations small, but attentive. 3 P. M., met for Sunday School at the same place. Brother Benjamin Gochnour being Superintendent offered the hymn, "And are we yet alive ?" for the opening of the school. After about an hour's reading and asking and answering questions, we were called upon for a short address, after which we closed with singing and prayer.

SUNDAY, 27*th.* Meeting at three places at 10 A. M. The weather being somewhat unpleasant, and we having no horse to ride, we concluded to stay at home, we did so until some time in the afternoon, when we thought of the time that death visited our house and took away our little daughter Emma; so we concluded to visit the grave-yard where we had buried her a little more than three years ago. On arriving we opened the gate and went in, walked down the aisle until we came to the grave of our daughter. We looked upon the head and foot stones, then upon the green grass on the grave, until tears came to our eyes, but all was silent. Then we thought of the words of Jesus, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and wiped the tears from our eyes. We made a few steps and were beside our mother's grave, who died in 1829, 43 years ago. Felt very solemn, yet all was silent. Ventured a few steps farther and here we saw the graves of our eldest two brothers. Still farther, and we came to the grave of our step-mother, who died a few years ago. Tears would occasionally unbidden start.—True these were all dead and gone; but what made the most impression upon our mind was, that, right among these graves there was a small lot of ground vacant. "What is that for?" we said to ourself. Our mind served us, and we remembered that we have a father, who is now in his 86th year. "Certainly," said we, "this has been reserved for the burial of our father." We continued looking at the spot of ground, then wondered if we would have the painful duty of seeing his remains placed beneath the clods of the above named lot. The Lord knows, we do not; but we thought that, although we are only about half his age, yet we may be summoned to leave this world before him. We saw the graves of some of our school-mates, who used to stand up in our class with us and read out of the same book. Also we took a good look at the grave of Elder Levi Roberts, who married us, and we think made about the first loud enough appeal at our heart to get us to turn our attention Heavenward; also the grave of Eld. Jacob Allbaugh, who gave us about as much encouragement in the ministry as he well could. He died in 1867. Took our leave of the grave-yard and went on our way home. Adieu for the present.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

EASTON, W. Va., Nov. 8th, 1872.

DEAR COMPANION:—Quite a time has elapsed since I wrote you from my sylvan home. My pen has been silent, but my thoughts have again and again reverted to the busy workers in the "Sanctum," and I felt like sending them a word of greeting and cheer. Procrastination, that thief of time, whispered: "Wait till to-morrow." But the morrow flitted by, on wings of such electric speed, that it had flown ere I could call it mine. Now, however, the quiet of the long autumn evenings has come, and with it our thoughts are ripened and gathered and garnered, waiting only to be sent abroad into other fields and broader lands.

Last Saturday, brother Gans and I went on a mission in the upper part of this county. We went through rain and mud, but the Spirit of the Lord went with us, and all was well. The kind brethren and sisters who received us into their homes made our visit a delight. Never shall I forget the harmonious family circle, where each brother and sister were ruled by that great law of love in all their intercourse with each other, as they gathered around the good, old-fashioned wood fire. Truly, we thought, Christianity is not a mere name, when it bears such rich fruit in the home circle.

Saturday evening and Sunday morning we listened to words of admonition as they fell in mild accents from the lips of brother Gans, and we felt it was good to be there, and when another concluded the worship in those sweet words: "Our Father who art in heaven," they fell on our bowed heads like a benediction, and we went forth strengthened, and, we trust, purified.

May God add his blessing.

L. H. MILLER.

For the COMPANION.

On Criticism.

The above is a subject which, in my opinion, demands special attention. I have again undertaken to solicit new subscribers to the COMPANION; and am sorry to say that there are still objections and excuses for not taking the paper, among which are the following: "Too much criticism, too much controversy, too much crossing one another's opinions," and such like objections. I still tell the people that I thought that of late there had been some improvement made in that respect; that, in my opinion, there was not as much of that now as there was formerly; yet still there is more of it than I would wish to see, or thought profitable. I tell the brethren that it was the brethren's own fault, and not the Editor's; because it is the brethren's paper, and it is in their power to make it more interesting.

We have noticed, sometimes, at the close of some communications, privilege is granted by the writer for brethren to criticise as much as they please. Beloved brethren, let me suggest an idea. Would it not be for the better, if brethren, instead of criticising one another's productions, would merely give their opinion, or views, or an expression of their sentiments, and then let it pass without trying to make it appear that their views are correct, and that their brethren's have no foundation. Example. When a query appears in the COMPANION, and if brethren feel disposed to reply, let them simply give their views, and the reason or foundation of such views; and should the sentiments expressed by a brother, differ from any other brother's, and should he feel disposed to give attention to the same, let him express his. Let all do thus, as many as feel disposed, but without trying to make void their brethren's. Let the readers be the judges, proving all by the Word. This manner of explaining Scripture would be very interesting to me, and, no doubt, to the brethren, and common people generally.

Yours in gospel love and affection.

Moulton, Iowa. JACOB BAHR.

BROTHER HOLSINGER: As there has nothing appeared in the COMPANION of late from Dunning's Creek church I thought perhaps it would not be amiss to give a little account of our love feast. The 19th of October was appointed to keep the feast. As I live a distance from the Brethren and seldom have preaching in this place, I thought I would do my best to have a meeting at St. Clairsville, for it was about one year since we had the last meeting in this place. I succeeded in getting brother Grabill Myers to respond to the call, but on account of the short notice, the congregation was not as large as common, but the order was very good and we must believe the attention was good too. I have heard some remark that they like to hear him and wish he would come oftener. Now that is all right as far as it goes, but I am afraid their hearing might do them more harm than good, if they would not do what he tells them. "For he that knoweth the Lord's will and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes." But I am somewhat digressing. Brother Meyers preached here on the evening of the 16th, and the 17th in Pleasantville, evening of the 18th in the new meeting house where the love-feast was to be held on the 19th. We were well supplied with ministers. Jno. S. Snowberger, Grabill Myers, John W. Brumbaugh, Joseph Berkey, and H. Mussleman were present. We had a good meeting, only the house was crowded, and consequently there was some disorder among the spectators. Next day meeting again and after meeting I left for home, but the meeting was to continue till the evening of the 21st. I did not hear the result of it any farther. Yours in love.

NOAH B. BLOUGH.

BROTHER HENRY:—Brother William Johnson and myself paid a visit of love to the brethren of Armstrong county, Pa., from October 11th till the 21st. Found them well, generally, and in good spirits. The church is alive to her work, and is still growing. We tried to fill twenty appointments during those ten day's visit among them, and we were much edified, and, indeed, strengthened, from the enlargement of their hospitality and many warm and tender tokens of love, (tears not excepted,) both during the pleasant hours of religious devotion, and that more enlarged interview—the Christian's Primitive Feast of Charity and Lord's Communion. This exercise was participated in on Saturday night, October 12th. Sincere love was thoroughly manifested, and each enjoyed it very richly. During this occasion two were chosen to fill the responsible trust of deacon-minister. It was a very cordial choice; not often such a unity of mind is observed, and this was seeled into the hearts of the brethren and and sisters at service of installation. The kiss of Peace was crystalized with many tears. Doubtless the Lord's bottle has them gathered "for a more convenient season," "when he shall call for those who spilled them for Jesus' sake." The names of those chosen are Brother Samuel Garvin Smith and brother Emanuel Wampler. We think they have been made to trust the Gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who is the power of God unto salvation. Many do not feel able to do so. Oh, that the members of church would more bear the cross of Christ, in opposition to the worldliness of this generation. Then the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ would be seen by this unfriendly world, and his grace would enable them to walk worthy of their calling in Christ Jesus. Four souls were made to feel for the salvation of Jesus, and were baptized accordingly. Our prayers are offered to the throne of God in behalf of those dear brethren who have been so recently called to labor for the cause of Christ. Whilst we think of them, we think of those who did us so many acts of Christian kindness in conveying us from place to place, and endearing us to themselves and the church of our choice at large, for making us comfortable by day and by night. To one and all, they have our heartfelt thanks, and we shall give them this promise: that we will ever be under resting obligations for an opportunity to return any domestic favor, should they ever drop into this vicinity of country, and we do think that we shall be more dutiful in contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints.

We cannot pass by those friends and brethren who, by reason of affliction or other home circumstances, were denied the privilege of being with us. To those who feel what it is to be poor, we will promise aid, and for those whose afflictions are very trying, we encourage all the brethren to be engaged with the Lord's mercy. That prayer is a strong means of deliverance needs no doubtful disputations, but, on the contrary, needs obedience to the Gospel command; then it is a mighty power.

We found our friends well, thanks be to the Lord, and the branch here was being increased to six souls: so that, whether at home or abroad, it is no matter, so that the church is up to her business, and see that her stewards are prayerfully encouraged, and that Brotherly Love continues.

"Perfect Love casts out fear,
But fear has its torment."

Yours, in Gospel union.

Jos. I. COVER.

H. R. HOLSINGER: To-day I was to one of our meetings.—The text spoken from, was the sixth chapter of Ephesians. We were told many good things, which pertain to the working out of our soul salvation; how to war successfully, to conquer the enemy of the soul. Oh! how we all should rejoice for the glorious privilege that eternal life can be obtained through the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; yea, too, that we are in a land of liberty, where none molest us in our Christian duties, as we have them in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom be ascribed honor and praise for evermore.

We have nothing to fear, now-a-days, but our own negligence. Procrastination has deceived many, whom the enemy of souls has allured through youthful lusts. In private life, as in public literature, he confronts the convicted sinner with wonderful temptations to high enjoyments of the pleasures of the transitory things of this world. Filled with high aspirations, the sinner wanders about, but cannot attain to rest of mind and spiritual peace and comfort to his soul. What a pity, that so many of our fathers are thus lead about, as it were, in a strange land, where there is no gospel light,—a land where there is nothing but gloom and darkness. The shadow of eternal contempt has o'erspread the bright days of their conviction, telling them that the road they were travelling was not the gospel path to life eternal, that all was not well with them. What a pity, too that so many of our sons and daughters are so unconcerned about the salvation of their souls, seeking rest and finding none! oh! their pitiful state, who can tell? They are all as it were, in the world of fiction, not necessarily deceiving, but being deceived—overshadowed with the smoke of pestilition, and defamation. "A proud look is an abomination in the eyes of the Lord." How can we pass by and not notice? Who can stop the pen and stay the hand? "If God be for us in the truth, who can be against us?" Taking all into account, what an alarming time it will be in that great and notable day of God Almighty! When all must stand before God their heavenly Father, who in his goodness and wondrous love has done so much for all, how shall we appear? Then all who have served their own bellies, and received the mark of the beast on their forehead and in their right hand, shall go into everlasting perdition; and only those who served in the true vineyard, and have worshipped only God shall be received up into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Oh, what joy! Brethren, continue, all you that have the gospel zeal, continue to work with the whole armor of God. Stand faithful in all gospel duties.

Again, the moral sinner, conformed to rules of right, and practice of the duties of life. He has no confidence within his own convictions. He believes that God is, and that the Gospel of Christ is a saving power unto salvation; but he stands, as it were, between the walls of perdition. The Gospel offers him salvation, asks his resignation to all the heavenly declaration; but he replies: "I know not where to go, for all the churches are wrong. The members do not act and deal in conformity with the requirements of God's laws." Thus he walks in the path of defamation and detraction. All that is holy in the church of Christ is bitter to him; and so is all that is a sweet-smelling savor unto life in the virtue of the blood of Christ. He has not tasted of the power of God in the light of the holy commandments of God, given by his son Jesus. He becomes a self-righteous man, and does not know that he is blind, and lame, and halt, and miserable, and naked, and full of subtlety, pouring forth all manner of confusion along his path, spitting out destraction to all that will not endorse his opinions. Dear readers, "If the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" Let us admonish one another daily, while it is day, for the night of death will come upon all flesh, and who shall be able to stand? "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto churches." "To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it." Rev. 2:17. Dear reader, what a consolation, if you can but have confidence in the word of God, and the evidence in you, having the promise of immortality through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then take upon you the yoke of Jesus, and learn of him; for he is all in all. "All power is given unto" him, "in heaven and in earth," and he told his servants to go "and teach all nations," and that they should, baptize "them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Here we have no reason to hesitate a moment, for, behold, what a prize is offered—a crown of eternal righteousness to all that continue faithful to the end. How can you follow the vain things of this world, while convinced that you cannot stand, unless you serve the Lord. Then turn to God. Now is the day of salvation. Receive the waters of salvation, and Jesus will rescue you from the danger you are in to be lost in sin, and at the last day will make you a holy saint in heaven above.

PETER STOUFFER.

E. L. YODER, Clerk.

SCHUYLKILL, PA., Nov. 11, 1872.

BROTHER HENRY:—If the box of MSS is getting low, the last No. of the paper manifests no inferiority in quality.

We have fixed on the 7th of December to begin a meeting of some days: and any brethren passing this way during the succeeding ten or fifteen days will be cordially received at the meeting. Brothers J. Trostel and Ephriam Stoner have promised to be with us.

I have rheumatism, but am able to attend meeting. Brother Unstead is not well, and at present cannot preach; and on account of his tremulous hand cannot write. To-morrow he starts to Baltimore to visit a daughter living there, and will remain until those Brethren from Maryland come over.

Oh, how sad—the older brethren passing away—some of the young called also—and so much work to do.

We are waiting to hear from Maine. Hope we may have good news.

ISAAC PRICE.

Announcements.

We expect to have a series of meetings in the Dry Valley meeting-house, Mifflin county, Pa., commencing in the evening of the second day of January, 1873, and to continue about one week. We give an invitation to all who have a desire to be at our meetings; especially the ministers of the different arms of our church around us.

JACOB MOHLER.

MARRIED.

On the 12th inst., at the residence of the bride's parents, by brother Abram Gelley, JACOB J. MILLER, of Newville, Cumberland county, Pa., and sister MOLLIE HOLSINGER, of Waynesboro', Franklin county Pa.

JOSIAH FAHRNEY.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to deal all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Lost Creek church, Miami county, Ohio, August 1st, at the residence of her son-in-law, Frederick Wertz, sister BARBARA WEAVER, widow of brother George Weaver, deceased, (who died in 1855.) aged 92 years, 9 months and 18 days. Funeral discourse at the Donnell's Creek church, in Clarke co., by brethren Joseph Arnold and Jacob Crist, from Rev. 14: 12, 13.

Sister Weaver was born in 1779 in Shanandoah county, Virginia; was a daughter of brother John and sister Elizabeth Click. In 1832, with her husband and family, moved to Clarke county, Ohio; and after the death of her husband, she moved to her daughter Barbara, (a widow,) and lived with her until shortly before she died, in March last. Then she was taken to her daughter Sophia Wertz, where she died. She was the mother of eleven children, and raised seven of them of which five are now living; grandmother of 37 children, (29 surviving,) great-grandchildren, 56, (45 surviving). She was confined to her bed for nearly five years, but was rational to her death. She suffered great pains, yet we hope her suffering was her great gain. We think she was fully prepared to meet her God, as she called on the Lord for days ere she was taken. She was a church member for 72 years. She was buried in the Brethren's grave-yard in Clarke co., by the side of her husband.

H. H. ARNOLD.

At the residence of his mother Isabella, and step father John Boas, near Strode's Mills, Mifflin county, Pa., October 9, 1872, after an illness of 5 weeks of Typhoid fever, BENJAMIN WESLEY BOLLINGER, aged 30 years, 10 months, 16 days. Funeral sermon by friend John Bartle, from these words: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 3 : 10.

He was a single man, and oldest son of Brother Peter Bollinger, who died near Shirleysburg, Huntingdon county, Pa., about 29 years ago.

SOLOMON W. BOLLINGER.

In Neosho county church, Kansas, October 7th, 1872, sister LAURA, wife of George L. Smith, aged 32 years, 11 months and 9 days, leaving husband and two small children to mourn their loss, which, no doubt, was her great gain. She was a very much devoted sister. Funeral services by brother John Hoover and the writer—Rev. 14 : 12, 13.

Also, same church, JOHN HANLEY, son of brother John and sister Esther Vankorn, aged nine months and ten days. Funeral service by brother Wm. Brandt and the writer—"Suffer little children to come unto me."

SIDNEY HODGDEN.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Shall we Know our Friends in Heaven.

Under this caption, several brethren have given their views: I will also offer a few thoughts, and, as our object should be, to approximate the truth, as nearly as it is possible for us to do in this life, upon subjects, metaphysical, or that are not clearly defined, and which do not contain any of the organic laws of our faith, we should endeavor to give our views in the spirit of forbearance, in respectful language with all due deference for the opinions of others; for one person has as good a right to his opinion as another, until convinced he is in error.

The term friend, as used in connection with this subject by the brethren, is confined to those only, to whom we are related by the ties of consanguinity. I will use it in its more extended sense, giving it the scope that our Savior did, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Then all who do the will of God are friends of Christ, and he is their friend, and consequently they are friends to one another, and thus includes all "who fear God and keep his commandments." Now the question is, shall these know each other? Of course they will! They will know Christ as he knows them, and will consequently know each other, as they are known of Him. But I have not the remotest idea, whatever, that they will be known by names, by which they are known in this life, neither by family relationship, nor as male and female, but will be as the angels of heaven, and shall have a new name, and be of one family, having God for their Father, and Christ Jesus for their elder brother, constituting the great family of God, and as readily recognizing the great progenity of the human race, with all their posterity, in their redeemed state, and having with them, the same divine relationship, as their own natural parents, children, or brethren. In a word, the sacred shall intuitively, know each other, by the new name and by no other name, as readily as Adam knew, what to call his wife, and the beasts, fowls, and fishes at the beginning. As to the remembrance of persons, things and scenes, of this life, I regard it as extremely doubtful, that any knowledge shall be retained of this sinful, and wicked world; from the fact, that the righteous will not remember any good deeds done, "for the least of Christ's brethren," nor the wicked, any neglect of duty. Now, in order to comprehend these ideas looking through the Apostle's glass darkly, where only a feeble, glimmering view can be had, we must lay aside this corruptible, and put on incorruption, this mortal, and put on immortality, and death, hell, and the grave. Those three master enemies, must be first swallowed up in victory, and "We be changed in a moment" "in the twinkling of an eye." Then we will know each other only as we are known. The parable of Lazarus and the rich man, I think relates only to this, and our intermediate state; that is, from the present time, until the second resurrection, and shows conclusively that when people die, they do not go directly to Heaven, or to the lake of fire, as is generally supposed, and usually preached, but the spirits of the just go to paradise or Abraham's bosom, a place of rest; and the wicked to a place of torment, called hell; when in pleasure or pain, the former await the first resurrection and the latter the second resurrection, after which will be the general judgment, and everlasting happiness or misery ensue in the presence of God in Heaven, or with the devil and his angels in the lake of fire.

Now brethren, I have briefly given my views upon this interesting subject; and also I see nothing wrong in exchanging our views dispassionately, upon any matter of present or future interest, so that the whole body may be of one mind; yet I think it would be more profitable to acquaint ourselves with, and use the means to get to Heaven, when the secret things that belong to the Lord will be revealed to us. There is more controversy upon metaphysical subjects, and contentions among Christians "about words that engender strife," than plain truths that relate to our present and immortal welfare.

A New Commandment.

Having just received our welcome paper, at our new home, we noticed a reply of sister Rapel to some unknown reader to us, who says we fail to give the origin of the rite of feet-washing. We think the origin of the rite can be found in the 34th verse of the 13th chapter of John, where Christ says "A new commandment I give unto you, that we love one another, as I have loved you. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love to one another." Some no doubt will say, that the new commandment was to love one another. But we think the new commandment was to wash one another's feet; for the Savior says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples," or that ye have learned it of me; for he was the only one that ever taught it. To love one another was no new commandment. To prove my assertion I will call your attention to the 2d epistle of John. "And now I beseech thee lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another." Now it is plain John, that was present when Christ gave the new commandment of feet-washing. Now if John understood Jesus to mean to only love one another, then how does it come that he tells the elect lady, that it was not a new one but that which they had from the beginning as given from the Father?

Our Savior's Prayers.

Our Savior was not only the most efficient of all teachers, but also the most consistent; for every virtue that he requires in others was perfect in himself, and the duties enjoined upon others he faithfully observed. He, knowing the worth of prayer, enjoined it upon his disciples. He even spake a parable to the end "that men should always pray." But he did not merely teach others to pray and how to pray, but he prayed much himself. As our Savior prayed so frequently and so earnestly, surely we, who are weak and needy, ought not neglect prayer. The following selection is to the point:

The inspired record shows that our Savior's life abounded in prayer to his heavenly Father.

He is first presented to us at prayer, at the very beginning of his ministerial work: 'Being baptized and praying, the heaven was opened. Luke iii. 21.

He next appears at prayer in the course of his sermon on the mount, when he first delivered the 'Lord's prayer.' Matth. vi. 9.

Later in his history, on a different occasion, we find him repeating essentially the same form of prayer. Luke xi. 1.

About the beginning of his miracles after great success, he goes out into a mountain near Capernaum, a great while before day, to pray. Mark i. 35.

When his enemies were powerfully stirred up against him, he spends a whole night at prayer, and the following day calls his twelve apostles. Luke vi. 12.

At another time his history presents him in the wilderness, praying. Luke v. 16.

Again the sceneis Jesus, alone, praying. Luke ix. 13.

Again, as he is surrounded by a great multitude; mothers present their little ones, asking him to put his hands upon them and pray. Matt. xix. 13—15.

After feeding the 5,000 with the five loaves,we find him withdrawing in the evening to a mountain near the Sea of Galilee, and spending the greater part of the night in prayer. At the fourth watch of the night(about 3 o'clock A. M.), he came to his disciples, walking on the sea. Matth. xiv. 23.

At the grave of Lazarus, deeply sympathizing with the bereaved, we hear him groaning (probably mentally praying) and then making a prayer of thanksgiving. John xi. 33, 38, 41, 42.

The next scene of prayer is upon a mountain near the Sea of Galilee at the time of its transfiguration. "He took Peter, John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray; and as he prayed the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening." Luke ix. 28, 29.

Next, a few days before his death, he prays, and is answered with an audible voice from heaven. John xii. 17, 28.

The fullest of all his prayers on record is that one just after he had instituted the supper, and at the close of his sermon. John xvii.

Next, the scene is in the dark, retired walks of Gethsemane. Alone, at a little distance from Peter and James and John, at the critical period of redemption with the most urgent entreaty and yet with submission to the divine will, he prays three times. Matt. xxvi. 39, 44.

Last of all, on the cross, he prays for his enemies, "Father, forgive them," etc., and then prayerfully commends his spirit into the hands of his Father. Luke xxiii. 34, 45.

After the resurrection, on four occasions, we found him pronouncing a blessing upon his disciples. Such was the last of his life on earth. "He led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands and blessed them. And it came to pass, while he blessed them he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven." Luke xxiv. 50, 51.

We may observe that his prayers were often made alone, sometimes where two or three were met together, sometimes in a larger social circle, and sometimes in the great congregation. He prayed when temptations were before him, after great successes, in times of deep trial, and when he was about to accomplish some important work.

As our High priest he has now entered into the most holy place,within the true tabernacle,and there he will ever live to make intercession for us.

When he taught that men ought always to pray, he was himself practicing what he preached to us; and as he taught so much, both by precept and example, and the Bible introduces the subject so many hundreds of times, and under so great a variety of forms, prayer must be a momentous agency in the economy of of grace. "Lord, teach us to pray."—Am. Mess.

BEAUTIFUL ZION.

Beautiful Zion, built above,
Beautiful city that I love,
Beautiful gates of pearly white,
Beautiful temple, God its light.

Beautiful heav'n, where all is light,
Beautiful angels clothed in white,
Beautiful strains that never tire,
Beautiful harps thro' all the choir.

Beautiful crowns on every brow,
Beautiful palms the conq'rors show,
Beautiful robes the ransom'd wear,
Beautiful all who enter there.

Beautiful throne of Christ our King,
Beautiful songs the angels sing,
Beautiful rest, all wand'rings cease,
Beautiful homes of perfect peace.

Non-Conformity to the World.

Jesus Christ declared, in his high-priestly prayer to his Father, that his disciples are not of the world: "They are not of the world." John 17:16. The true disciples of Christ are of God. John says, "We are of God." The people of God are a distinct and separate people from the world; that is, they are of another character and party, engaged in a calling which is opposed to the sinful maxims, customs, and practices of the world; yea, in many things in which, not only the unconverted, but, lamentable to say, many of the professed disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus, do not discover any impropriety, and thus contend and plead for unnecessary fashions of this sinful world. How often do we hear them say, "There is no necessity in being so particular in our customs, dress, &c." Here I would remark, that it is a great pity, and is certainly a great injury to the cause of Christ, that there is so little uniformity in sentiment, and still less in practice, on the subject of self-denial, in the brotherhood. Oh! that the people of God were of one mind, and judgment! It is certainly their privilege and bounden duty to be in the unity of the spirit, as the Apostle writes to the Ephesians, "I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called; with all holiness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Eph. 4:1. 3. So Christ prayed to his Father, "that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." John 17:21. Thus it is very evident, that the people of God should be united, and be as uniform in their customs and habits as possible; that there be no difference of character among them. Such as plead for the foolish and giddy fashions of the world, let them be professors of religion or not, must surely have a proud heart, not willing to walk in the path of self-denial; and it would be well for them seriously to reflect upon what Christ declared, Luke 17:15. "Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." The riches, honors, and pleasures of the world are very tempting. That the people of God be not overcome, let them be humble, keep down at the feet of Jesus, and they are safe. It is dangerous, and certainly unbecoming, for them to imitate the world in its costly and unnecessary adorning of the body. Such conduct is indicative of a high mind. It would be well to bear in mind, that everything that has a tendency to keep alive and exalt the corrupt nature in man, should be abandoned. The people of God have a right to use the world, but not to abuse it, as the apostle Paul writes, 1 Cor. 7:29-31. "But this I say, brethren, the time is short. It remaineth that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and those that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possessed not; and they that use this world as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away." The world can be abused in many ways. If we spend our money, or the gift of Providence, for that which is of no real advantage to soul or body, it is an abusing of the world; and oh! how much time and money are spent merely to attract the notice of the eye—the gratification of the flesh! whereas, it becometh sinners to be found at all times, in an acceptable state to present our bodies, as well as our souls, living sacrifices unto God, as the Apostle writes, Rom. 12:1, 2, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Again the apostle tells us to let our "moderation be known unto all men." Phil. 4:5. That it is our duty to observe plainness, hear what the apostles Paul and Peter say upon the subject: "In like manner, also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2:9. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel." It should always be borne in memory, that our bodies were originally taken from the earth, and will return to the earth again. This solemn truth should teach us humility, and not to pride in our bodies, but to bring them under subjection to the will of God. The Church of Christ should be distinguished from the world in the inward and also the outward man. Christ tells us that the tree is known by its fruits. When we can discover no difference in conduct between the world and those who profess not to be of the world, we conclude that the difference is in the name only, which, in this respect, is worse than nothing. The most of the world's recreations are sinful, and are an abuse of time, and should be abandoned. We admonish our fellow pilgrims to the land of promise to "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God;" and as John, the beloved disciple, exhorts, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." 1 John 5:21. When we are called off may our bodies be conveyed to the tomb in peace, and our souls be accompanied through the dark and shadowy valley of death, and arrive safe at home.

Touching Devotion.

One of the most touching cases ever told on paper is this, of a little boy, a mere child, who traveled one thousand four hundred miles, taking care of the body of his dead mother all the way. An expressman, on reaching his office early one cold morning in January, observed on the sidewalk a long, heavy box, which his practiced eye at once identified as containing a corpse. Upon the end of the box, shivering with cold, sat a little half-clad boy about seven or eight years of age. Addressing him kindly, he said:

"My lad, don't sit there, you will freeze. Come in and sit by the fire." Bursting into tears, the little fellow replied:

No, I can't come. My mother is in this box, and I promised her that I would not leave her until we got home."

Deply affected with the touching devotion of this brave little fellow, he finally succeed in convincing him of the entire safety of his precious charge, and taking him to a neighboring restaurant, gave him a warm breakfast, and then learned the particulars of his story.

His father died about a year previously in a remote village in Minnesota, leaving his mother in poor health and nearly destitute. She died but a few days before the boy's sad journey, charging the little hero with the sad duty of conveying the remains to a distant State and furnished him with (all she had) a sum of money barely sufficient to carry them both by freight cars to their destination.

The little fellow had actually ridden day and night in a freight car with his melancholy trust, never for a moment losing sight of it.—Exchange.

Is Feet-Washing a Christian Ordinance?

TO THE "READER OF YOUR PAPER."

In number 32, current volume of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION, you had yourself heard on the subject of Feet-washing; expressing a feeling of sympathy for the people for whom they were publishing a paper; and in order to remove the scales from the eyes of so dogmatical and conceity a people, you would give them the origin of that troublesome and yet Gospel ordinance, Feet-washing. I for one am glad that our editors gave you room in our paper; for it has brought forth some able articles on the subject, and no doubt has brought others to reading and meditation. Yet with all this, I, who am zealous for my Master's cause, cannot pass you by without saying something in regard to this matter. What I have to say, I mean to say in as plain a manner as I can. So then be it understood, that I shall approach you as I would any other dissenter from the truth.

You say, "We are ready to admit that there was such a thing as Feet-washing practiced among the people, and there still is such a practice among them."

Most assuredly there is; for every family that practices cleanliness does just that very thing, and it matters not are they Christians or Heathens, white or black, in the order of their races. You, kind "Reader," undoubtedly practice this washing; and so do all the brethren and sisters.—So, then, in this kind of washing feet we condemn none, for all seem to engage in it. This is about the kind of Feet-washing you refer us to in the Old Testament Scriptures, and then triumphantly exclaim, "The above should be sufficient to convince any candid mind." "Rest assured, it is just sufficient to convince us all of the fact that it was a washing for the cleansing of the feet from the dust that would naturally accumulate upon them while on their journey from place to place. In this we differ not so much, and hence we pass it by for the present.

The next question that presents itself to my mind is this, How can the "Reader," or any other man in all this land of Bibles, make the Feet-washing in John 13th, and that in Genesis, Judges, 1st Samuel, &c., one and the same thing? In those instances which you refer us to, the person washing washed his own feet, whilst in John 13th the person washing washed other's feet. That is quite a oneness!

The next question is, "What gave rise to the feet-washing described in John 13: 1–15?" Who but a villifier of truth would ask such a question, especially when we read the answers given in the cases referred to? You started out with filth as the cause, and now it is strife, and yet one and the same! Oh, what a chaos!' You had better read again.

"If Feet-washing was a command that was to be observed by all Christians, Matthew, Mark, and Luke should at least have mentioned it in their writings."

By this I understand you to say that inasmuch as we have but one evangelist, John, to speak of Feet-washing, it leaves the observance of it a matter of indifference. Permit me to apply this method of reasoning to some other ordinances of God's house. When I look upon the general order of the different Churches, among other things in those orders is the baptism of water. How is this done? In every case in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Where and by whom was this written? By John? No; Luke? No; Mark? No; by Matthew in his 28th chapter. Remember, only Matthew, none other. Now be consistent and treat them alike, for if you accept Matthew upon this important subject, and yet he standing alone, and refuse the testimony of John because he stands alone, remember his testimony will damn deeper than man can ever rise, for acting so inconsistent with good reason, and strong revelation.

The fifth paragraph is completely demolished by the fourth. In the fourth paragraph feet-washing was introduced because of strife, and in the fifth because of a Jewish custom. These are the traps men walk into who try to set aside truth.

"The last point under this head is"—My impression is, there is neither point, nor head in the matter, for you blunt up all the points and sever all the heads. You sit upon the shoulder of your beast yourself, as we shall see presently. The point you try to make in this paragraph is not, to show that feet-washing was not practiced by the Savior, but that we, in our zeal, wash the feet of too many; and because we make it congregational, by this is meant practice it among the lay-members, irrespective of sex. This is quite a point or a head. I don't know which, if either or both, your own practice murders the creature.

In the same night in which feet-washing was introduced, the Bread and the Cup were also introduced, and mark you, to the same parties the clergy; and in its introduction it was said, "Divide it among yourselves." I cannot read that the Savior brake the bread to any others than the clergy; but by going into the churches of professed Christianity, I see it broken to the lay-members, and even the females. Who authorized you to do so? "If we say the Lord, they will say, why then not also wash feet? If you say the Pope, every one knows that he is an antichrist.—So we will say.

From the 7th to the 13th paragraph, inclusive, you make as strong an effort as well can be made to prove that feet-washing is no command, and how do you do it? Only by showing that the apostles in their writings do not make mention of it. With this you will set aside more than you imagine. For instance, the commission by Matthew you set aside as not being an argument in favor of feet-washing, because the Lord there said, "Teach them to observe all things." Feet-washing was not included, because mention was not made of it in the Acts nor writings of the apostle. This method of reasoning would also set aside another important injunction in the commission; and that is this, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." This you would not wish to have set aside, yet at the same time your manner of reasoning does set it aside, for neither in the Acts nor any of the writings of the apostles can you find that the apostles ever baptized in the three names. Will you set yourself up against the apostles, and say that they obeyed not the injunction of their Master? Again, you speak of the "communion" being made mention of in the Acts of the Apostles; by this you mean the bread and wine. In this the apostles have failed again, for in the Acts of the apostles we read of the breaking of bread, but of the cup in connection, no time: and besides this, we have the breaking of the bread and the cup in connection therewith, made mention of but by one apostle, and that by one born out of due time, I mean Paul. All the others are silent on this subject. Now then, if you make your point a little sharper, you will punch this ordinance out of the church, upon the same principle that you punch feet-washing out, or by putting it under the proper head you can reserve the wine among the clergy.

"I think I have made this matter plain." I think so too. You have made it so plain that even a fool can not help but see that men, who uphold such doctrines, are not only trying to pervert scripture, but are fighting against God, and that with a high hand. When Baalam, the prophet, went in opposition to the will of the Lord, God had an ass prepared to reveal unto him the dangerous course he was pursuing. What it would take to bring such revilers and villifiers of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus to speak more respectfully concerning it is something that I have not yet learned. I think I will give my few strictures to your consideration. Receive them as from a friend; and from one that holds the commands of God in high repute.

Farewell.

Christian Courtesy.

I have been requsted to write something on Christian courtesy; but I will commence with, "Recompense unto no one evil for evil; but overcome evil with good," and, perhaps, towards the close I may say a few words on Christian courtesy.

"Recompense to no one evil for evil." This, perhaps, is one of the most unpleasant of Christian duties, and very disagreeable to human nature, but nevertheless it is one of the brightest ornaments for a Christian; it is like a city set on a hill. O, that there were but few in the church that could not stand the test of an unrevengeful follower of our blessed teacher! This can and ought to be a well established principle among us. There is a mighty work accomplished when we can hold or check our evil propensities in time of trial. "He that can rule his own spirit in time of trial, is greater than he that taketh a city." But to overcome evil with good comes a little closer. This is a self-sacrificing principle, and requires a good portion of that greatest of gifts, Charity.

Here, perhaps it will not be amiss to say a few words in regard to self control. When we are called upon in the time of duty, it is always best to sit with a calm mind at the foot of the cross, and in deep meditation consider, that our dear Redeemer, while in the flesh, exhibited both in his life, and in his death one of the most illustrious examples of forgiveness the world ever beheld. "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." Oh, what a blessed example for us to imitate. Happy is that brother or sister that can lay claim to such a forgiving Spirit. They are as "Salt to the earth, and the light of the world." How easy and pleasant it is to love and to do good to those that love us. But we are commanded to love our enemies, and do good to those that hate us. Charity, denotes all the good affection we aught to bear towards one another. It is also faithfulness in friends. It is much easier to bear the assaults and abuses of an enemy than of a friend. Here I will say a few words on Christian Courtesy. It is true we can be courteous and still not be Christians: but we cannot well be true Christians without being courteous. To be courteous we must not be indifferent to others feelings nor blind to their discomforts. We must think of their accommodation before we think of our own. Webster, defines Courtesy. "Elegance and politeness of manners. Act of civility. Favor or indulgence." I am sorry to say that we sometimes see more of Courtesy among the world than among some of the members. This ought not to be so. As a sister said not long ago. "There aught to be something written on Christian Courtesy, or good manners, for there are some members that are a little uncouth and impolite." But here the trouble is, they are generally such are no readers, and perhaps, it would not reach them. Christian Courtesy among members is of great value. It is one of the best means to promote brotherly love. We are admonished to "Be kind to one another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you." And the apostle Peter tell his brethren to "Have compassion one of another. Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrarywise blessing: knowing that ye are thereunto called." "But, above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfection. Charity suffereth long and is kind: doth not behave itself unseemly; seeketh not her own: is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil." The apostle Paul says, "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Charity and brotherly love are closely connected. But oh, brotherly love! here my pen is almost ready to drop from my hand; it is indeed too weak and incapable to describe its value. But good bye to the brethren, etc., how precious in the sight of God! It embraces all the characters of charity, and what goodness is added to it, who can tell its worth! It is the very essence of religion, and one of the best evidences within ourselves and perhaps to others too, that we do love God. The apostle John says, "By this we know that we have risen from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" "Beloved, let us love one another, for God is love, and this commandment we have from him. He that loveth God loveth his brother also." We are all brethren and sisters in the same family. We were all born of the same mother, and sincerely hope of the same Father also. So let us be loving, courteous, kind and obliging to each brother, and always see to the interest of others before our own, and try to imitate our elder Brother as much as possible. For there is danger of half brothers and sisters existing this family, they may be born of the same mother, but not of the Father. This had been the case in the apostles time and we know it to be so now. There are some that like too well to take care of number one, or to see that self is first served, before they think of others who perhaps stand more in need of help than they themselves. This is not Christian Courtesy.

Now if I have not done justice to the subject, let abler pens than mine set it forth in its true colors.

Brother Mine.

BY J. W. BEER.

When gloom comes o'er thee like a cloud,
Brother mine,
And thou with sorrow's weight art bowed,
Brother Mine;
Then look beyond the cloud of gloom,
Let not thy sorrow seal thy doom,
In yon bright world there's ample room,
For thee and thine, dear brother mine.

Affliction's waves may o'er the roll,
Brother mine,
And persecutions try thy soul,
Brother mine;
But that blest world is free from pain,
No trials there shall entrance gain.
That sweet abode thou may'st attain;
Yes, thou and thine, dear brother mine.

Here wants and cares of life abound,
Brother mine,
And toil is oft with failure crown'd,
Brother mine;
But there no want nor care is known,
All toils have ceased and failures flown,
That home so sweet to thee is shown—
To thee and thine, dear brother mine.

That blissful sphere, so bright, so fair,
Brother mine,
With all its joys, thou too may'st share,
Brother mine,
Our blessed Lord has gone before,
He's waiting on the shining shore,
With beauteous robes and crowns in store
For thee and thine, dear brother mine.

Say, wilt thou seek the home above,
Brother mine,
Where all is peace, and joy, and love,
Brother mine?
Oh, seek no dwelling place below,
Where thorns abound and thistles grow;
But seek the home where pleasures flow
For thee and thine, dear brother mine.

For the COMPANION.

Parables.

Inasmuch as Christ has represented the kingdom of heaven by many parables, so also has he represented the divided tribe of Juhah by many parables. The first class, the scribes and pharisees, the second class, the publicans and sinners, which they cast out of the synagogue and would not fellowship. We will commence at the 15th of Luke: "Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners, for to hear him." These were not sinners of the gentiles; for Christ was only sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. But the scribes and pharisees murmured, "because he receiveth sinners and eateth with them." Hence he reproves them with the parable of the lost sheep.—He also represents the scribes and pharisees as one part, the publicans and sinners as the other, in the parable of the two sons. The younger son had wasted all his goods, probably as the elder son had said, "devoured thy living with harlots." "He was angry at the reception of the younger son by the father. Just so were the scribes and pharisees angry at Christ, because he received sinners. But the Savior told them, that the publicans and harlots should go into the kingdom of heaven before them.

Again, we have another parable of a certain man having two sons, representing the scribes and pharisees as one part, publicans and sinners as the other. "He came to the first and said, son, go work to-day in my vineyard. He answered and said, I will not; but afterwards he repented and went, and he came to the second and said likewise; and he answered and said, I go, sir, and went not; Math. 21: 28, 29. Also in the same chapter is a parable of a certain householder who planted a vineyard, but this needs no explanation, for it is so plain that even the priests and pharisees perceived that he spoke of them, and they sought to lay hands on him. Again, "There was a certain rich man, who had a steward that wasted his goods." This the covetous pharisees also perceived he spake against them, and they derided him.

Next comes the much disputed parable of the rich man and Lazarus.—The rich man who was clothed in purple and fared sumptuously every day, was the scribes and pharisees, "which set in Moses seat," for the purple was only worn by the ruling class of people, such as kings wore; hence in mockery they brought the purple robe and put it on Jesus, crying, "Hail! King of the Jews." The purple belongs to Judah, as they were law-givers; for it was written, "The scepter should not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, till Shiloh come." He also was rich. How did the scribes and pharisees become rich? they got rich in robbing God. They inquired wherein they had robbed God. The answer was, "In tithes and offerings." They had made the house of God a house of merchandise," and "a den of theives." The Savior also accused them of robbing widows' houses, and for pretence making long prayers. Now Lazarus, the beggar, was the publicans and sinners, being also descendants of Judah. This we have proven by the parable of the two sons, the elder and younger. Also the other parable of two sons, the first and the last. Now we know by the reading of the Scriptures, that the self-righteous pharisees, would not eat with those they had cast out, which were the publicans and sinners, and upbraided the Savior for eating with them. But the Gentiles associated with them, and had dealings with them; hence the Savior says, "Moreover the dogs came and licked his sores." The Gentiles were the dogs that befriended the outcasts of Judah. This, we think is plainly set forth by what Christ said to the Greek woman, "It is not meet to take the children's bread and give it to dogs." She said, "Yea, Lord, yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." "And it came to pass, that the beggar died." But how did he die? He died, just like the prodigal son died in the parable just before.—We think Paul gives us the key to his death, when he said, "Sin taking occasion by the commandment deceived me, and by it slew me, and I died." Now, here are three men dead that had no burial, because they were dead to the law by the body of Christ; and being in Christ, they were Abraham's seed according to the promise. This carried them right back three hundred and thirty years beyond the law, into the faith that rested in the bosom of Abraham, even before he was circumcised. But the rich man, (the scribes and pharisees) also died, but was not carried to Abraham's bosom. Oh, no; they were determined to establish their own righteousness by the works of the law. The beggar we stated died to the law, the rich man died with the law; for Paul says, the law which held them in bondage was also dead. Next he must be buried. For an example of his burial, we will cite you to Jeremiah 22: 19, "He shall be buried with a burial of an ass;" which was to be drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

Next, is, "In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment." For this, we will also cite you to Deuteronomy 32: 21–23. And he cried to father Abraham, not to God; for the scribes and pharisees always justified themselves, and boasted of being Abraham's seed. But Abraham said, "Son, remember, thou in thy life time receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And besides all this, between us and you, there is a great gulf fixed," &c. Just read the 23d chapter of Matthew, and you will not fail to see the gulf. "Wo unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrits; for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, nor suffer them that are entering to go in. Ye serpent, ye generation of vipers! how can you escape the damnation of hell?" Of them was required all the righteous blood from Abel down to Zacharias. Next he pleads for the five brethren. Scribes and pharisees being Judah, there were just five brethren left: Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Zebulum. These were the sons Jacob had with Leah. If the careful reader will only take notice, nearly all the parables that Jesus presented to the Jews represented these two classes, the scribes and pharisees, and publicans and sinners. Many more parables might be produced to prove the same fact.

LEAH CRONCE.

Clarksville, Iowa.

Did the Divinity of Christ Suffer upon the Cross?

Busy have been the gifted pens of the most gifted divines of the present day discussing upon the atonement of Christ at large, and especially upon that part of the subject (if it could be so claimed) which heads this article, whose masterly productions I have read, and re-read with much interest, and, I hope, profit. For the time being, said pens appear to be silent, either from a sense of having exhausted the subject, or each considers himself victor, and retires from the field of contest, bearing off the palms of victory.

But the minds of the masses, while they have been much enlightened, seem to be divided or unsettled with regard to the sufferings of the divinity of Christ. Not that I wish to resurrect the subjects or its discussion again, but to wind up the whole matter in a "nut-shell," thus: The creature man sinned, and incurred the penalty "death." hence needed an atoner of the same nature of himself, "sin excepted." Christ came and took upon himself that nature, and received said penalty, and man, having no divinity about him, could not, nor did not, need the sufferings of divinity in his redemption; and unless it can be proven that there was divinity in the man that sinned, it is absurd to think of the sufferings of the divinity of Christ, when there was not anything for said divinity to suffer for. The creature man sinned, and only the man Christ Jesus (and not Christ the divine) suffered for said sinful creature, man. The manhood that Christ assumed was all that the law of God demanded of man for his disobedience, which manhood he offered a living sacrifice "upon the cross," and thus completely and fully satisfied the demands of said law. If the divinity of Christ was to have suffered and did suffer "upon the cross" for sinful man, why did he assume human nature and blend it with his divinity, and suffer in both the penalty imposed only upon the human? Surely it did not take the sufferings of both to pay the debt of one.

If Christ the divine died, then God the Father and God the Holy Ghost also died, for they are one. Then, in that event, pray tell me what would become of the world? Do we not know that the devil, who only is restrained by the Spirit and power of a living God, and was not permitted to "touch the soul Job," or the "body of Moses," and who "as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour," would have taken advantage of the death of the Godhead and so garbled up and ruined the world; that the resurrection of Christ (a thing under the circumstances impossible) would have been too late to have accomplished that whereunto "he was sent?" The declaration of Christ to the thief upon the cross, "to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," sets aside at once, and forever, the absurd idea and false theology of the sufferings and death of the divinity of Christ "upon the cross." His divinity cannot die; if it could, his "kingdom, which is to stand forever," can be destroyed, which is not only absurd, but is a grand inconsistency, and it make the legs of the lame not equal.—Christian Index.

Affliction.

Affliction! how heavily dost thou sometimes fall upon us! And why must thou continue so long? Hast thou so great a work to do in us, that it requires months, yea, years to refine this mortal body? I have been myself, we all, to-day. What more can I do? This may be the reasoning of our minds; and yet we are afflicted and [illegible] suffering here, another there. The world seems to be [illegible]. Here one [illegible] every [illegible] and neighbor, who cannot [illegible] without [illegible], another is [illegible] with [illegible] others are [illegible] Let us look at what direct[illegible] I say, I can [illegible] When I go to my dear father's home I see there the [illegible] hand of Paul [illegible] ally stricken the persecutor sight from his eyes. Our dear mother, too, must suffer the burden of affliction. But O my dear parent, you do not suffer bodily pain like many others do. Let us just for a moment think of Adam Hellinger and his Christian consort, of whom I have just read in the COMPANION. Here is affliction in its real character. How it moves my soul to see such Christian patience manifested! It is not to wonder why God in his mercy is so lingering. Surely they are of the third part: "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried. They shall call on my name and I will hear them. I will say, it is my people." Zech. 13: 9. What a consolation! "They shall call on my name, and I will hear them. It is my people." To Paul "was given a thorn in the flesh." For this thing he besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from him, and he received this answer: "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." 2 Cor. 12: 8, 9. "I have chosen you in the furnace of affliction. Isaiah 48: 10. "And he shall sit as a refiner and purified of silver." He is watching and waiting, while you are going through this purifying process. My dear sister, Maggie M——, I think of you as I pen these lines. Have you ever thought of the beautiful idea, that Jesus is sitting by you in your bed for nearly two years, while he is taking you through the furnace of affliction, watching and waiting for the purification of your soul? And to your mind he [illegible] I feel to say, Sister, although thy body is bound to bear, be patient yet awhile. Remember, thou too art in the furnace, and God may choose thee out of it, if you yield yourself submissively to his justice. Perhaps it may not be long till Jesus will say to thy poor afflicted companion, "It is enough; come, I will take you to my Father's house. There the sorrows of earth will be remembered no more." One glance into the holy city and we will bless God that he has counted us worthy to suffer affliction. Jesus has suffered much, and he knows what we can endure. Let us, then, gently submit, and the victory is ours: "It is my people."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The Signs of the Times.

IN REPLY TO BROTHER G. W. BURKHART.

DEAR BROTHER:—The subject in which we differ is one of great importance, according to my views, therefore I feel constrained to offer a few more thoughts for your consideration. Little would I care for the difference of our opinions, if it were only a matter or subject of opinion. But as it is a scriptural point in which we differ, we may, according to our views or opinions, pervert or misconstrue the meaning of it, and thereby not only deceive ourselves, but also others. Before I go any further I will explain what I mean by subject of opinion. There are some matters or subjects in which we may differ, that will do no harm to ourselves or to others. In our late numbers we have a difference of opinion about knowing one another in heaven. Here we may decide on either side without harm to ourselves or to others. This is not a point of doctrine; and the only importance I can see in it, is, for us to try and get there, then we will find out all about it. The subject on which we differ, I contend, belongs to the signs of the times. This not only concerns me and you, but it concerns all the followers of Christ; therefore I think it a subject of importance, and feel very much pressed to offer a few thoughts on the signs of the times.

Years make times, months make years, weeks make months, and days make weeks. All have a beginning and an end. The year of 1872, which we commenced ten months ago, is close to its end, and how do we know it? By the months that have passed already. How do we know that the season of winter is approaching? Because we take notice of the signs of the times, and those who are wise will prepare for it.

But the passing away of the year, or the changing of the seasons, is not the time I have referred to: I only give this for an illustration. "When the fig tree putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." The things our Savior hath reference to are what we call the signs of the times: signs our Savior has given us, whereby we may, if we are wise, understand—what? the day or the hour of his coming? No: but understand that the time of his coming is at hand, even at the doors. Then time will be no longer. By this I understand the time of grace will have an end: he that is holy will be holy still, he that is filthy will be filthy still. Now I will come to the signs our Savior has given us that we may not be in the dark, and that day come on us as a thief in the night: 1 Thess. 4:16, 17. The Apostle Paul speaks of the coming of our Savior, 5:2, 4. He says, "When they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh." "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Why were the brethren not in darkness? Because they had the same signs that we have, only we are about 1812 years nearer the time. How much more time we will have, to look for the appearing of the Son of man in heaven, I cannot say, but I am safe in saying, very little, for the Apostle Paul said, "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10:37. "But the end of all things is at hand: be ye, therefore, sober, and watch unto prayer. Peter 4:7. "This we know also, that, in the last days, perilous times shall come." That we are living not only in the last time, but in the last days, is a fact too well established to be contradicted; but I perceive that we do not see or believe alike in regard to the signs which shall come to pass before that great and notable day cometh. Some will say, as we notice in No. 35, that the signs we have mentioned in Matthew 24 by chapter will have their fulfillment in the future. But, perhaps, while we are contented and waiting for those signs to come to pass, the sign of the Son of man may appear, and perhaps a little too soon for us. "Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Now we will come to the signs in Matthew, 24th chapter.

After our Savior told his disciples of the destroying of the temple, they came unto him privately, saying, "Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" The first answer he gave was: "Take heed that no man deceive you." This seems the most important part; however, he told them too, what signs should come to pass before his coming, and also before the destruction of the temple. Those who were wise took the advantage of those signs and saved their lives: those that were foolish did not take heed, and therefore had to perish in the destruction. Time and space will not permit me to write about those signs now, perhaps many hereafter.

I will now come to our subject, which belongs to the signs of the time in which we are living. "Take heed that no man deceive you." I said before that this is the most important part. Why? Because, "there shall arise false christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect." Here, I will say, if we are wrong and know it, we are not deceived. But if we are wrong, and think we are right, there is deception and disappointment at the end.

Now to our false prophets or transformed preachers of righteousness, do we believe they will come? I will now speak to the brethren and sisters in general, because it concerns us all. No doubt we all say yea, for Christ said so, and he is a true prophet. Do we believe they will do those signs and wonders? Yes, for Christ said they shall do it. Do we believe that they are disciples of Christ, because they do signs and wonders in his name? No. Why not? Because Christ said they are false prophets. But if none can do signs and wonders but true followers of Christ, where do they get their power to do such things? I say, from their master, the devil. Yes, but brother B. says the devil has no power of his own. This is the point in which we differ. I say he has, and I will prove it. In my former article I had reference to the magicians before Pharoah. Brother B. says they did curious things. If they did nothing but curious things, then Moses also only did curious things. I still call them miracles, and so we leave this point and go to Job. "And the Lord said unto Satan, behold all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand." What did Satan do after he had permission from the Lord? He made fire fall from heaven, to burn up the sheep and servants of Job. The one that escaped to bring tidings to Job, said the fire of God is fallen from heaven, not knowing better, so we too may be deceived in those false prophets. When we see them doing those signs, we may think like the Samaritans, that they are the great power of God. Here I see the danger: therefore I write as I do. But, not to depart from our subject, what more did the devil do? He made a great wind come from the wilderness to blow down the house where the sons and daughters of Job had come together to eat, and drink wine. What more he did you can read for yourself. 2 Thess. 2:8, 9, we read that, "the Lord shall destroy with the brightness of his coming, even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders." Much more can be said to prove the power of Satan, but space won't permit. I will now show in a few words how he uses his power for our deception. We are told he is going about as a roaring lion, to seek whom he may devour. No deception there. Again, we are told that he transforms himself into an angel of light. What a contrast between an angel and a roaring lion. How we fear the one and admire the other, and there is the deception. Oh, let us be on our guard, that we will not be deceived. Brother B. says, "not likely that Christ would lend his power to devils to work miracles in his name." I say so too. The brother thinks we could not know the good from the bad, or if the devil could do it with his power, how could we make the distinction? We have the detector in our houses, let us make good use of it. I cannot say all I would like to, for my article would be too lengthy. I will conclude by saying:

Come, brethren, let us trim our lamps,
Come, sisters, do the same;

That we be found as virgins wise
To praise the Savior's name. [comes,
The Bridegroom comes, the Bridegroom
Get ready, don't delay,
That we may not be foolish found,
Or sleeping by the way.

Come let us meet the glorious throng
Of angels bright and gay,
The wedding guests are all along,
Oh, what a happy day!
It is to be for rich and poor,
For all that love the Lord,
For all that do obey the King,
According to the Word.

But those that say "Away with him,
O'er us he shall not reign,"
They will be brought before the King,
And there they will be slain.
For so the King himself did say,
Therefore it must be true;
But still some will deny his Word,
And disobey him, too.

Oh, who will not act with the wise,
To flee the wrath to come,
And strive to win that glorious prize,
Which is so easy won?
The time is hast'ning to its close,
But I don't know how soon,
Perhaps before another year
The Bridegroom may come.

Indulgence.

As we are weak and dependent creatures, we are apt to indulge in many things contrary to the laws of nature, and contrary to the divine laws—and by this many ruin ourselves for life, destroy our precious health, the gift of Providence, and the best gift we have in life. How often we can see the poor man, whose family almost perishes for want of earthly comfort, and the poor mother sheds tears to see the sad condition of their once happy home, now in ruin. Why has this change taken place? The only reason is, the father has indulged in strong drink. Ah! how well I remember of seeing a poor, aged mother, with streaming tears, beg her son to quit the intoxicating bowl—but he has indulged in this deadly poison for a long time, and now he finds it has taken such a hold on him, that he can no more resist his craving appetite, though he is on the brink of the grave, and he sees that he has shortened his life. But alas, too late! To quit would be instant death. Oh! can we imagine how that man feels when he thinks of the future, of his awful condition after death? He has no hope of happiness in time nor in eternity, for soon the last, lingering ray of life's sun will disappear, and he must hear his final sentence, and share a drunkard's reward.

But this is not all that can be included in. He can indulge in the use of tobacco, and carry that to excess in smoking or anything that Satan tempts, or anything that is sinful. We should beware of indulgence, and guard against it, and procure our happiness in time and eternity. By rejecting these, and living a holy, pure and virtuous life we may hope to meet our friends who have gone to the eternal world, and be with them in Father's fair plain, where we shall no more take the parting hand of those that we love, and see them pass from life. There we can be together through the countless ages of eternity. G. W. SNIVELY.

The Falling Leaves.

The leaves around me are falling, falling. Gently they come from the topmost bough and twig to the nether earth below. "The brown, sear, yellow leaves, all mingling together, making a checked mantle to spread upon the "lap of earth." The frosts have come and gone, but they left their trace upon the forest leaves. Autumn's chilling breath merely touched the fluttering leaves, but in that touch was death. His cruel fingers have plucked the flowers of the valley and glen, and all around me I see beauty and verdure fading. Soon winter's chilling blasts will hold in close embrace oaks of the forest and roots in the earth. We must await nature's resurrection morn, when beauty will come forth, and loveliness spring forth into existence.

Thus the falling leaves remind me of dear ones falling before the chilling frosts of death. Around me are falling the old and young; into the ground they are dropping, as the leaves from the trees. Some with hoary heads are cut down by the scythe of time; others, in the prime of life have felt the stroke and let go life to fall into the arms of death. The young and gay, like flowers of the field, have been plucked by the ruthless hand of death, and dropped, as the beautiful leaves drop to the ground; and, too, the little cherub face, that smiled like a gentle ray of sunshine, felt the chilling frost, and like the aspen leaf that felt the icy touch of death, ceased to move, and down to the earth it fell and found a resting place to sleep.

Yes, sleep, little prattler, gently sleep,
Beneath thy new-made, earthly mound;
Whilst sunbeams through the osiers peep,
And birds make music all around.

Sleep, oh pretty, gentle one,
Thy little pilgrimage is o'er;
Now safe at the Savior's seat,
Sing on the hills and shining shore.

In the resurrection morning all those that around us are falling will spring forth into life. Those that have done good will be clothed upon with honor, glory, and immortality, and fitted for the realms of eternal bliss. As the silkworm, locked within its crystalls shell, comes forth by the power of God, in the spring a beautiful insect with bright and shining wings, so will, by the same power, come forth those little bodies incased in earth, bright winged angels, and fly to the shelter of a Savior's love.

Think, careless soul, you like the falling leaves may soon fall. The next breath that blows from the deep shores of death may cut thee down, and oh! if it be in thy sins, where shalt thou go? Eternity will answer in the depths of God's anger and condemnation.

Labor.

From that time mortal labor has been looked upon by man as something beneath him. Why is this? Did not God tell Adam that he should earn his bread by the sweat of his face, and should not the commands of God be obeyed without a murmur? Should we shun, or look with contempt on any command of God? No, we have no right to disobey any one of his commands, no matter what they may be. All his commands are just, and must be obeyed. Without labor, what would this world be? What is it that turns the unbroken prairie into fields of waving grain, and fills up cities? Why, labor. Yes, it is labor that helps to embellish the works of nature, and remodel them to suit the wants of man. Above all this, who is happier than the industrious man? Whose sleep is so profound, or rest so sweet as that of the honest laboring man, resting from his toil?

Mrs. Osgood has said:

"Labor is rest—from the sorrows that goad us;
Rest from all petty vexations that cross us;
Rest from sharp contempt that ever assails us;
Rest from the world-storms that howl to us "Die."
Work—and pure slumbers shall wait on thy pillow;
Work—thou shalt ride over care's coming billow;
Lie not down, wearied 'neath woe's weeping willow;
Work with a stout heart and resolute will."

Walk in the Light.

"If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world; but if a man walk in the night he stumbleth, because there is no light in him." John 11:9, 10.

In this language our Savior states a well known fact; namely, that light is necessary to enable us to see, that in walking we may not stumble. Light is one of the five senses with which God has blessed us; and, perhaps, none but those who once enjoyed but have lost it, know how to appreciate its importance. But by making an effort to walk or work in total darkness, when no ray of light salutes our eyes, we can best learn to sympathize with the blind—with those to whom light and darkness are the same.

In the foregoing text Jesus plainly intimated to his disciples, that he was walking in the light of his omniscience, and that he knew when, as well as under what circumstances, he could safely return to Bethany. If he had been mere man as they were, and as finite in his knowledge of surroundings, then there might have been some risk—some danger—he might have stumbled, erred, in returning at that time, so soon after enraged Jews had sought to stone him; but as he knew all things, he knew when and under what circumstances to return.

But can we not make a spiritual application of this lesson? We think we can, and that it was intended that we should do so. Naturally, we need the sense of sight, and light to enable us to see. We may have sight, but if there is no light to be reflected, we cannot discover objects by that sense. So also there may be light beaming all around us, bearing the reflected images of all surrounding objects, but if we have not sight to receive the impressions, we cannot see, and consequently we must grope our way as in darkness. But if there is light to be reflected, and we have sight to receive the reflected images, then we see, unless we close or cover our eyes so as to prevent the light from reaching them.

Spiritually, we must have minds susceptible of receiving impressions, and there must be light, or information, to be communicated, or we cannot see—understand. If we have minds and there is no information to be conveyed to them, we cannot understand. So, also, if there be information, instruction, knowledge, all around us, and if we have no mental faculties to receive instruction, we cannot comprehend, or understand, and we are destined to stumble through the world in profound ignorance. But if there is any instruction to be transmitted, and we have mental powers capable of receiving and retaining the knowledge of facts and things, we will understand, we will know, we will see; and if the knowledge gained is of a spiritual nature, we will see spiritually, unless, indeed, we close or cover our minds so as to prevent the beams of knowledge from reaching our perceptive powers.

God has created light. He made the sun, the moon, and the stars to give light by day and by night. But some persons are born blind, and, consequently, they never see; others once enjoyed the sense of sight, but, by some means, have lost it, and, therefore, they cannot see; others, again, still have this invaluable blessing and they improve and enjoy it.

So God has filled the world with mental and spiritual light, or knowledge. But some persons are born blind, mentally, and, being idiots, they never could perceive nor understand; others were once blessed with mental powers, but through some unfortunate means have lost their mental faculties, and, being insane, they cannot receive instruction, whilst others, again, are blessed with the healthful exercise of the noble, God-given faculties of the mind, and they receive, improve, and enjoy mental and spiritual light.

But there are persons who are blessed with the sense of sight, who do not improve the light that God sheds about them—they pass through the world in partial blindness. So, unfortunately, there are those whom God has blessed with the noble faculties of intellect, who fail to embrace and enjoy the mental and spiritual light which God sheds around them along their pathway through life—they pass through life as partially insane or idiotic.

The blind cannot be blamed for not seeing; neither should the idiot nor the insane person be censured for not understanding. So he who, having sight, will not see, is not wise; and he who has his mental faculties unimpaired, yet does not avail himself of the privileges of obtaining and improving useful instruction, both mental and spiritual, is to be regarded as "a foolish man who built his house upon the sand." But he who is blessed with sight, and uses it according to God's purpose, is wise and enjoys the beauties that surround him; and so he, who possesses a sound mind, and improves it as God designs he should, receives and enjoys mental and spiritual instruction, and the Lord will consider him as "a wise man, who built his house upon a rock."

There is a useful lesson in every object in nature by which we are surrounded. We may and should derive some information from everything which comes to our notice, small or great, in the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms. So is the world full of good books, containing the results of extensive and laborious research. Great minds have read the book of nature and have translated it into books of art, and carefully set its lesson on different subjects under distinct heads, or sciences. Hence it is that good books, scientific works, are valuable helps in the acquisition of knowledge. He who is blest with a sane mind cannot innocently pass by such grand opportunities of storing his mind with pleasant and profitable information.

But it is in God's book—the Bible—that we find the complete encyclopedia of spiritual instruction. This blessed volume contains God in revelation, and it is an indispensable auxiliary to the study of the God in nature; so, also, every lesson correctly drawn from nature may assist us in understanding the Bible. But as the Bible is a complete summary of all spiritual light, it should be our chief study; and it is only by strict attendance upon its teachings that we can walk in the light of God. The man who closes his eyes to this glorious light, and plods his way through life in darkness, or by the dim light of nature, it is to be feared, will, as did the rich man, lift up his eyes in hell, and find himself tormented in flames.

Let him who is blessed with mental powers walk in the light of God's word. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin;" 1 John 1:7. J. W. B.

Charity.

Sister "Charity" has again paid us her annual visit, subscribing and paying in full for three copies of the COMPANION and five Almanacs for 1873, to be sent to as many different persons. We would tell her real name; but as she subscribes herself "Charity," we suppose she prefers to do her alms in secret and not let the left hand know what the right doeth, and so we return thanks to sister "Chrity."

Now Ready.

The Brethren's Almanac for 1873 is now ready for delivery, and by the time this number has been read, many of our patrons who have ordered them, will have received their Almanacs. We can supply all demands. Price 10 cents. Per dozen, 75 cents.

We have been asked whether we do not mean to give our Almanacs gratis to subscribers. We answer, no; we cannot afford it; and our paper is now worth its price, and the Almanac is cheap at ten cents. We will give Almanacs or anything else that is preferred to the money, to agents, on account of percentage for subscribers.

New Lists.

Several new lists for 1873 have already been received. Thank you, friends, for your promptness. Go earnestly to work, and allow no opportunity to secure subscribers to be lost. Our list could easily be doubled if all our friends would exert themselves, and use their influence in our favor.

Correction.

In number 30, page 479, first funeral notice in second column, read, Susan Kagerice instead of, "Susan Kaganie;" also Susan Sell instead of Susan Lell.

Our Digestion.

We have been favored with a copy of the work entitled, "OUR DIGESTION, or MY JOLLY FRIEND'S SECRET," by Dio Lewis, published by George McLean, 733 Sanson street, Philadelphia. It contains information calculated to do great and lasting good to those who read it. The subjects treated upon are of vital importance. Mr. Lewis inculcates the necessity of bodily exercise, of temperance in eating as well as drinking, of simplicity in diet, of proper attention to the cooking of victuals, of fresh air, of not overloading and overtasking the stomach, of slow mastication, of regularity in eating, and of other means whereby indigestion and dyspepsia may be avoided and conquered. Three-fourths of all the sickness and unhappiness in our midst has a weak digestion for its prime cause, and dyspepsia may almost be considered a national failing. How easily this can be overcome our author clearly shows in his usual felicitous, chatty, home-like style. The doctor talks right to the heads and hearts of the whole people—rich and poor alike—and this is the secret of his great popularity. The simple reading of one of Dio Lewis' books will dispel a host of "the blues." "Our Digestion" is simply invaluable and "Our Jolly Friend's Secret," which means long life, health and strength, physical and moral is worth many times the price asked for the volume. The book is issued in splendid style, and contains a striking portrait of the author, on steel, and other fine engravings. We predict for "Our Digestion" an immense sale and lasting popularity. Address as above.

Missionary Correspondence.

Dear brethren and sisters, greeting; We will now give you a brief report of our journey and doings. Owing to a change of the schedule on the Penn. R. R. and branches, I missed the morning train on the 28th Oct., in consequence of which I did not reach Meyerstown until the morning of the 29th, hence did not enjoy the satisfaction of spending a pleasant night with my brethren and sisters of Lebanon county, as anticipated; but instead had to take my lodging at the Farmer's Hotel, Harrisburg. But on arriving at Meyerstown I was met by brother John Herr; and was conveyed to his house, where I met brother John Zug, and brother Daniel Longanecker my colleague in the Maine Mission. After a season of prayer, and partaking of a breakfast together, we were accompanied by brother and Elder Zug to Meyerstown, where we got our tickets for New York, via. Allentown, &c. Arrived at the city in good time, and took lodging at the Merchant's Hotel. After a good night's rest and refreshment, we resumed our journey, and in due time reached the busy city of Boston. Took lodging at the Arlington House, near Eastern Depot. Nothing of note occurred here, except that the citizens had a torch light illumination in consequence of a political state victory.

October, 31st. At 8 A. M. took cars again, and passed through Portland, one of the chief cities of the state of Maine; thence through Augusta, the capital of the state; and at 7 P .M. arrived at Skowhegan, the destined railroad point. Took quarters at the Skowhegan House, and fared well. Skowhegan is an Indian name, signifying; "A place to walk." The town contains about 4,000 inhabitants.

Nov. 1st. Having been referred for information to a S. D. Arnold, we sought him out and presented our letter of reference; but not having any knowledge of Elder Dennis's call, or our coming, after we had explained, he gave it as his opinion that Dennis should not have called us; saying, "There are already too many churches here." However, as the day was too wet for us to walk, he took us to a livery stable, engaged a good carriage, and paid one third of the fare to take us to our destination. Arrived at Elder John Dennis's about 11 A. M. and met a hearty and warm reception. Elder Dennis is a man measuring 5 ft. 11½ inches; weight, 200 lbs; age, about 74; is obliged to walk with two canes, having been crippled up with Rheumatism. He is an intelligent, free-spoken man, and, perhaps, a little too liberal in religion. His wife is rather under medium size, two years older than her husband; is also distressed by Rheumatism, so that she must use a crutch in going through the house; but she appears a very pious and kind lady. Their son lives with them. Quite wet to-day. We spent the day and night with the family; also the 2d, till P. M. when we were conveyed to friend Alonza Turner's, near the Blackwell meeting-house. Were kindly entertained here, but somejealously eyed. On Sabbath morning, 3rd, we were accompanied to the meeting-house, where were appointments for forenoon and afternoon. But being still wet the number was small, and in consequence, the minister did not attend, so it seemed that providentially a way was opened for us to be introduced to the people. We occupied the house both seasons, and had good attention. In the evening met at Elder Dennis's and preached in his house. Here we received invitations to other private houses. So on the 4th we visited friends Frank Adams and his father Amos Adams. Evening, meeting at John Milton Adams's. Good attention. 5th were taken to friend James Gilmore for supper. Meeting in the evening at Blackwell meeting-house. 6th, visited the family of friend James Frederick, and were conducted by him to friend Dinsmore Cleveland's. Meeting near by at the school-house. 7th, quite wet all day; could not attend meeting to-night. 8th, clear and stormy. On our way to the next appointment, we rode part of the way on a wagon drawn by an ox team. Dined with Elder D. Meeting at friend Amos Adams's in the evening. 9th., pleasant day. Wrote a letter to grand-daughter, Mary Riley, in the forenoon, and P. M. went with J. M. Adams to the house of Deacon Heyden, to what they called a conference meeting—such as we would call experience or social meeting. Enjoyed the meeting well in the main. Evening, preached again at the house of Elder D.

10th, meeting at the Wharf meeting-house, morning, afternoon and evening. To-day for the first, we discharged the "GOSPEL ARTILLERY" by touching, treating, and insisting on the points of difference between them and us. In the afternoon service we brought in the subject of Trine Immersion, with some reasons and remarks; and in the evening read John 13: 1—17, and spoke thereon as we are accustomed to do at our love-feasts. There was a profound silence in the house during the discourse, to which, we thought, the Lord gave freedom and energy and we trust and pray may add his blessing. We have already, the satisfaction to know, that some of our hearers said, that we proved by the scriptures all that we said, which was, 1st, showing that the phrase "these things" embrace feet-washing, the supper, and the communion; 2d, that the supper is a distinct ordinance from the communion; and 3rd, that feet-washing is a church ordinance. So now the match is thrown into the mine, and we will await the result, and still labor wherever a door is opened. We were kindly entertained last night and to-day by mother Withee (widow of Elder Withee,) and her son Owen, in whose house this report is written. We enjoyed excellent health, since we are here; and could not reasonably expect more kindness or care to be bestowed upon us than we have received so far, everywhere we have been. Not only do they minister to our wants, but are offering prayers for us, and are bidding us God-speed. How long we may remain is quite uncertain. Whenever no more invitations are given, we will consider it a token to strike tent, remove, and leave the issue in the hands of the Lord; praying with the poet:

"Tho' seed lie buried long in dust,
It shan't deceive our hope.
The precious grain cannot be lost;
For grace insures a crop.

Pray for us, that God may guide, direct, strengthen, and protect us.

Addresses Wanted.

N. Dice, Newtonia, Mo., wishes to have the addresses of Eliza Webber and Laura H. Saunders.

PAOLA, KANSAS, Nov. 10th, 1872.

Brother H. R. Holsinger:—I this evening drop you a few hurried lines. We are now having meeting every Sunday, save when there are five Sundays in a month, then the fifth is vacant. The demand for meeting is still on the increase. Two weeks ago, brother John H. Ayers and I sent an appointment about 25 or 30 miles east, near the Missouri line. We had two meetings, Saturday evening and Sunday at 10 o'clock A. M. Lodged with friend George Hamilton, whose wife is a sister, and on whose account the appointment was made. This family moved from Ills., about three years ago, into a neighborhood where there were no Brethren known nearer than in our neighborhood, until quite recently when she found one near. The people there insisted very hard to have a meeting with sister Hamilton; but it was more particularly on the sister's account that we left an appointment. A certain man remarked to brother Ayers after meeting on Sunday, that he had not heard a sermon before, by the Brethren, for fifteen years. He was raised among the Brethren in Ohio. There are several others in that neighborhood in the same condition. No preaching by the Brethren! The result is, they attach themselves to other denominations as the best they can do. There are many such cases in the western country, while the Brethren are at ease in Zion. I am very much afraid, brethren, that we are not doing our duty. We hope that the Lord will put it into the heart of brother Flory to move into the above neighborhood, among them settle down, preach the word and live it. This, to my mind, is the way to establish missionaries. Brother Flory, when you come west, come over to Macedonia.

Wife and I had the pleasure of attending the communion in the Washington Creek church, Douglas county, Kansas. The communion was held in a tent 40x60 ft. A large crowd of people assembled. Brother Cripe from Indiana, led off from John 14: 1–6, when we tried to follow him with some remarks. We were informed that about six hundred ate dinner. We thought to ourself, "Why all this needless expense, labor and confusion, when we can have the same amount of preaching by commencing at one or two o'clock P. M?" This is only my opinion, and I am willing to submit to whatever time the brethren appoint. There were different laboring brethren there from adjoining churches. In the evening the tent was crowded, and a great many outside. The order was good, considering the crowd. One hundred and fifty-eight members communed. We felt as though we were in Pennsylvania, among the members there. We enjoyed the meeting very much. We however saw something there that we never saw before—a few sisters communing with sun-bonnets on. When will our sisters all come under the order. It does seem to us to be a hard task for the officiating brother to ask whether they are members. Sisters, if you could only see how pleasant it is for the younger to submit to the elder.

The brethren in this arm talk of building a house to hold their communions in. They need one, and the beauty of it is, we think, they are able to build it.

Well, brother Henry, we are still trying to preach in our way and manner. Sometimes we please the people, sometimes we offend. A few weeks ago we took the text, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." After the meeting, a Southern Methodist sailed out against us. We at first thought we would talk to him, but he was so excited, that prudence said, "Let him alone; he injures no one but himself."

Yours as ever.

GEORGE MEYERS.

To the Members Composing the Berlin Congregation, in Somerset County, Pa.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—It was the intention to say a few words,—a farewell—to you, through the columns of the much beloved CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION. This I had intended, of course, to be done before I left the place where I have been fed and nourished from the Master's table for some ten years, by true and faithful servants in the House of the Lord; but so far it was neglected, perhaps all for the better. We have now been living here in this beautiful place, surrounded by brethren and sisters, whose works show that they are bound for the service of Jesus, so after a trial here for some weeks, I feel like saying a few words as a farewell, also of admonition and warning.

We were born into the church of God here below, through the instrumentality of the Brethren at Berlin. Here let me remark, that I am fully aware of the tender string we touch when we apply the term God's Church to what some people call in a disrespectful manner, "Dunker Church." I am aware I have insulted the feelings of my best friends by giving utterance to the convictions of my heart. This is not my intention; nevertheless, when we look around us, and behold in what shape, manner, and color, christianity at our day is made, or manufactured, only for the sole reason to please a sin deranged world; when we see men, who profess to be ministers of Jesus, in order to gain some worldly interest, forsake the true teaching received, perhaps of a Christian mother, and conform to and be ruled by "the pleasing all men" motive; I say, when we see all this, is it then to be wondered, that when we take up our pen, and want to make our skirts clear, that their carnal feelings are hurt? But Brethren, do not give up the good old cause.—Remember, some of our old brethren have sacrificed their lives for the same cause, which we in our weakness seek to defend against all the hypocrites, and slanderers of this blessed religion.

Brethren and sisters, we lived among you until we have learned to love some of you as fathers and mothers, in Israel; some as brethren and sisters in Christ; others, as babes in Christ. Of the fathers and mothers in Israel, we know some to be strong in spirit, but who perhaps begin to be weak in body. Your labors will be over in a short time.—Soon the voice may be heard, "Come hither, faithful servant." It is true we cannot expect great labors any more in this world, but I tell you we may and will expect a good example in your days of grace here on earth. Oh, let us not be disappointed! We promised to follow you in the good old way, and we hope to meet you where the difference in age is all done away.

To the brethren and sisters in their middle age of life as well as in religion, we can only say, brethren, work a little harder, keep up courage to do God's will. If you meet with obstacles, remember, others before us have had them, and greater ones. You that are able to work now, remember the time may soon come when your strength and vigor may be gone.—The Master for whom you have worked will reward you. Some of you I know to be warm Christians. Do not let those who have named the name of Jesus through impure motives, allure you from your duty. It is a very poor reason, just because people call themselves brethren and sisters—if they only are such in times of meeting, and at other times meet and have their enjoyment with the very people who never have professed to be anything else than servants of Satan,—that I must do as they do. I know now, brethren, now, from experience, that it is much easier to be a Christian, in moral neighborhood, than it is where the ungodly are respected by even those who profess the religion of Christ. Brethren, I write plainly, but I know the danger that exists at such places. Therefore up, and go to work earnestly and faithfully, and all will be well with us.

I know there are those among you whom we shall meet in a better place, when all these partings shall be over, provided we,on our part, keep faithful, which, let me assure you, we will do, if God gives the strength. Then our victory shall be complete, and not until then.

Brethren and sisters, farewell to you all. When we think back, how often we have met with you to praise God, we remember those with whom it was and is hard to part; but when we consider over their lives, as far as known to us, oh, how we rejoice that they are such warm Christians. We know some who have consoled us in deep troubles. Oh, how thankful we feel to God that we have such brethren and sisters!

Now let us all together do our very best to make our hearts pure in obeying God's will and ours shall be a happy lot.

M. Hady.

Dale City, Pa.

From North Carolina.

Brother Holsinger:—As there is a small church of the Brethren in Forsythe and Davidson counties, in North Carolina, according to previous arrangements, myself and brother Jacob Faw left home, in Forsythe county, on Wednesday, the 23d of October, in view of being with the brethren in Ashe county, North Carolina, distance about one hundred miles. As this country is not favored with railroads, we had to go by private conveyance. It rained some, which made it very unpleasant traveling. In the evening put up with an old friend by the name of Messic, for the night.

Thursday, the 24th, after being kindly cared for, we made a start for the day. The wind was blowing, and still cloudy, but not raining. Fed at Colonel Pettie's. In the afternoon we passed through Wilkesborough, crossed the Yadkin River, then on to a little stream called Redis River, at the foot of the Allegheny Mountains. We took up lodging with a man known as Col. Whittington.

Friday, 25th, after being kindly cared for during the night, we started up the mountain; arrived at the top about 11 o'clock. Distance about five miles from the foot to the top on the Redis River gap. Fed and took dinner with a relative, Jonas Burkhard. About 1 o'clock in the afternoon passed through Jefferson, and on to sister Mary Miller's, on the North Fork of New River, the place intended for holding a communion meeting. Brother Jerry Slesher arrived shortly after, from Floyd county, Virginia.

Saturday, the 26th. The morning was pleasant. About 10 o'clock brethren Jesse Crosswhite, John C. Bashor, Solomon Arnold, Joseph Bowman, from Tennessee, arrived Held meeting about noon. In the evening attended to the ordinances of the Lord's house. The members were considerably cheered up; and there was good order and attention by the spectators.

Sunday, the 27th. After morning services, the brethren from a distance assembled at the meeting house and gave some directions concerning the lack of officers. And after taking the voice of the members privately, it was found that it was the desire of the church to have an elder ordained to watch over them, and that there were deacons wanting. After the 11 o'clock services, the brethren proceeded to inquire who had the best qualifications for those offices, and the lot fell on brother Hendrix Prater, to fill the office of elder, and brethren David Lewis and John Davis to fill the office of deacon. Had a candlelight meeting at the same place.

Monday, the 28th, traveled about three miles, to Matthias Miller's; meeting at 11 o'clock; also at candlelight.

Tuesday, 29th. Brethren Crasswhite, Bowman, and Slesher went in another direction, to hold meetings at other places. Brethren Arnold and Bashor remained with us, and held meeting at 11 o'clock, and also at night.

Wednesday the 30th. After taking leave of brother Miller's family, traveled about six miles to Jefferson, and held meeting in the Methodist church, at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon traveled about twelve miles, over very rough roads, and through the mountains, to brother Adam Sheets', on the south side of the Allegheny.

Thursday, 31st, required to attend to some funerals, near the foot of the mountain. After consultation it was considered that there was no chance to get a horse from Brother Sheets to the place of appointment, so we had to walk over hills and hollows, a distance of about six miles, and found a poor widow in quite unfavorable circumstances, that demands the sympathies of all. After dinner returned to brother Sheets' and had an evening meeting.

Friday, Nov. the 1st. Meeting at 11 o'clock and at candle lighting.

Saturday, the 2d. Meeting at 11 o'clock and in the evening communion; about sixteen members communed. Great interest was manifested by the spectators. It being cold weather, and raining and hailing, and the room small, it was much crowded.

Sunday, the 3d, the people came together in due time and manifested considerable interest in the meeting, with good order and attention. Started for home, and came down the mountain and lodged at Alexander McNeal's.

Monday, the 4th, clear and frosty, but pleasant traveling.

Traveled about 45 miles, to Wm. Gabard's, a Baptist minister, and was thankfully received and kindly entertained.

Tuesday. Home by 2 o'clock, and found all well and doing well.

Is not fasting a Christian duty? and if so, why do not the Brethren teach it more than they do?

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Beaver Run congregation Mineral county, W. Va., October 11th, ANGUS LEATHERMAN, son of brother Daniel A. and sister Margaret Leatherman, aged 21 years 7 months and 29 days. The deceased came to his death by a fall. He was building a porch to his father's house, and was standing on a ladder leaning against the house. He attempted to draw a cross tie that was fast in the house. The ladder slipped suddenly, causing him to fall, his head striking a log. He got up and walked into the house, picked up a book, and read some in it. After awhile his nose commenced bleeding, and he spoke of more misery in his head. Two doctors were sent for, but could do nothing to save him. The fall occurred about 10 o'clock, and at 6 o,clock in the evening he died. Funeral occasion improved from Isaiah 40 : 6, 7, by brother Daniel B. Arnold and brother Solomon Biser, to a large and sympathizing assembly.

W. LEATHERMAN.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

"WAITING AND WATCHING FOR ME."

There are little ones glancing about on my path,
In need of a friend and a guide;
There are dim little eyes looking up into mine,
Whose tears could be easily dried;
But Jesus may beckon the children away
In the midst of their grief or their glee:
Will any of these at the beautiful gate
Be waiting and watching for me.

There are old and forsaken, who linger awhile
In the homes which their dearest have left,
And an action of love or a few gentle words,
Might cheer the sad spirit bereft.
But the reaper is near the long standing corn,
The weary shall soon be set free;
Will any of these at the beautiful gate
Be waiting and watching for me?

There are dear ones at home I may bless with my love;
There are wretched ones pacing the street;
There are friendless and suffering strangers around,
There are tempted and poor I must meet;
There are many unthought of, whom, happy and blest,
In the land of pure love I shall see;
Will any of these at the beautiful gate
Be waiting and watching for me?

True Religion.

True Religion is the perfection of human nature, and the foundation of exalted pleasure, of public and private happiness to us. It is the source of the highest exaltation and perfection of man; having promise of the life that now is and that which is to come. It is the voice of reason, as well as the language of Scripture, "The ways of Wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." The Savior assures us that the burden of his religion is light: it is a service of great rationality. We are required to worship "in spirit and in truth." Such only are worthy.

True Religion is manifestly adapted to establish a sense of our obligation to God and Christ. The gospel does not place religion in abstruse speculation and metaphysical subtilities; not in outward show and ceremonies; nor in superstitions, austerities, and enthusiastic visions; but in purity of heart and holiness of life. According to the teachings of the New Testament, the sum of our duty consists in the love of God and our neighbor, in denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, in living soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present evil world, in visiting the fatherless and widows in their afflictions, and in keeping ourselves unspotted from the world. Under this gospel dispensation, true religion consists in repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as the person appointed by the supreme authority of heaven and earth to reconcile apostate man to his Creator, as a sacrifice for sin, as our vital head and governing Lord.

Are there any hardships or exactions in this? Nay, nor does the gospel enjoin any duty but what is fit and reasonable. It calls on all its professors to practice reverence, submission, and gratitude to God, and universal gratitude to men, and to maintain the government of our minds. And can we reasonably object to this? from the least to the greatest commandment of our Redeemer, there is not one which impartial reason can find fault with. His law is perfect; his precepts are true, and altogether righteous; not even those excepted which require us to love our enemies, to deny ourselves and take up our cross. It is more generous and manly to forgive an injury than to revenge it; to suffer reproach, poverty and even death itself in the cause of truth and integrity, than by base compliances to make shipwreck of our faith and good conscience. The Allwise Creator of our being hath so framed our natures, and placed us in such relations, that there is nothing vicous but what is injurious; nothing virtuous, but what is advantageous to our present interest, both with respect to body and mind. Weakness and humility, patience and universal charity, give a joy unknown to transgressors. As temperance and sobriety are the preservatives of health and strength, so likewise the virtues of truth and equity are the chief support of true friendship and society. The chief excellency of religion is, that it enjoins nothing that is burdensome, nothing that is unbecoming or injurious; but is advantageous to all, upon it depends our eternal peace.

The blessed Redeemer, who spake as never man spoke, affectionately declares the importance and value of true religion. "One thing," he says, is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken from her." And again, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Many persons will acknowledge the importance of religion, yet are not its true friends; few there be that find it. Many appear to be entirely careless of it; others have a form of it, but are not governed by its influence or power; while others act the part of hypocrites, who speak fair words and act foul deeds—Lift their eyes to heaven, but turn their steps in the opposite direction. Religion is not like the endowments of body or mind which we naturally possess; for the dispositions of mind naturally, or by nature, are altogether opposed to those of religion. Nor is religion a blessing that can be acquired without opposition or difficulty. The comman of Christ is, "Strive to enter in at the straight gate." These words import contending, as it were. forcing a way through whatever may oppose. There are those who profess to have a regard to Christ, whose hopes are in reality built on themselves; who imagine that, having done some part of the great whole, or as much as may be convenient, Jesus will make up the rest. But when Jesus invites the humbled soul to begin, he says: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me." He says, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you;" "If a man love me, he will keep my word." True Christian faith is that which works by love; and without the traits of holiness, faith is dead, being alone. The son of God says to his friends, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." The apostle Paul argues, that true Christians are dead to sin, and declare that the Son of God gave himself for them, that he might redeem them from all iniquity, "and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. If we, from our hearts, have received the Lord Jesus Christ as our Redeemer, we will also submit to him as our sovereign Lord; we will love the commandments of God as just and holy, without any regard to our convenience; we will at once yield up ourselves, body, soul, and spirit, to the Lord Jesus Christ, that, whither we live, we may live to the Lord, or whither we die, we die to the Lord. And while religion leads us to trust in the Savior's death, it will also lead us to copy his life; hence our lives can no longer be devoted to the pursuit of trifling vanities; for they are not our own, but have nobler objects to mind. We have a heaven to reach, a God to glorify, and a Savior to honor—a Savior whose command to every one of his disciples is, "Follow thou me." He has left us his example, that we should follow his steps.

"I do not speak of theology in controversy, but I speak of pure religion, the great principle for moulding the heart and mind. To banish this element would be a ruinous experiment, both as regards the pupil no less than the master. The former would be without the weapons he indispensably requires to enable him to meet the conflicts before him through life; those weapons are to be found in religion alone. The master has no stay or impelling motive so sure and efficient as religion. In his arduous and trying position, it is the origin and nourishment of all true devotedness. In such days as ours, there is a more urdent need than ever to teach the child that for which he was sent into the world, his duty to his Maker and his fellow-creatures, which is comprehended in the two great commandments, which the word of Revelation alone prescribes—the love of God and man."—Professor Neville, of Geneva.

The "Ark of Salvation" has no staterooms for passengers, but all who wish to embark for Heaven must ship as crew, and be always ready to man the ropes, scrub the deck, work the pumps, or watch at the mast-head. At the command of the Captain, every Christian sailor engages in his appropriate duty with an hearty "Aye, aye, Sir" upon his lips, and a glow of gratitude in his heart for the privilege of serving Jesus, the Master.

Friendship is the cordial of life, the lenitive of our sorrows and the multiplier of our joys; the source equally of an intimation and repose.

A Reply to a Friend.

A few days ago, I received a short letter from a particular friend of mine, I call him a friend, for I know him to be such. I wish I could call him a brother; but from the abstracts copied from his letter, the reader will see, that, although I wish he were such, he is very far from it.

First, he asks me, "What has become of your pen? We see no more articles in the COMPANION signed M. Hady." And why not? For fear that our friend, and others with him, might place a wrong construction upon my silence in the matter, I will only explain my silence in a few words. My pen is as good as ever, and would be applied, if at all, to the advancement of the good cause, as vigorously as ever; but there were other pressing matters to be attended to, I am in possession of what must be supported by every Christian father; namely, a family of small children; and again, pressing work in our new home. This is the only reason I have to offer. But if he is anxious to hear from me on the points agitating the so-called Christian world, if he will remind me now and then that it is my duty to work in this direction, of course I gladly will do it.

"Is the doctrinal still uppermost with you? It has sunk with me lower and lower." As to the question, I answer, It is, I want to serve God, not according as poor, sinful man dictates, but in the way God says I shall. I want to be saved, not on the plan of the Pope, or any other mortal, erring man. I do not want to follow in the ways and footsteps of some great, learned man, but in those of the meek Jesus of Nazareth. I will not be satisfied with those things which man says may do to save my soul, but with those which the great wise God has said—delivered through Jesus our Lord. These I know will not only save me, but every one who has sinned. I do not know how it is with those who esteem themselves self righteous, perhaps some other plan will answer for them. My Bible contains only one plan of salvation to save sinners, and that is, to do what God has made known through Jesus our Lord; and him I will follow no difference what you call it, doctrine, forms, Dunkardism, or what it pleases poor mortal man to call it.

"The more I read, the less I think about modes." What modes? The mode in which Christians should worship God? Is it possible, that ministers of the Gospel, of our day, will tell us such things? I feel really sorry that men of your standing,—men who go abroad preaching, who claim to be able to show and explain to people how to obtain eternal salvation, make such statements. Men whose business it is to study the way and plan that God has adopted to save a fallen race, do not care about the plan or mode! If God so loved the world as to send his only son into this world to endure all he has done, to suffer for no other reason than to reconcile us to God, to show us a way whereby we may obtain eternal salvation, provided we comply with the condition, after God hath done so much, will we then be so careless as to neglect it just because we think God is no righteous God, that he will not hold us responsible for all we can do in order to gain this eternal life, which he bids all mankind to come and obtain without money and without price? But after reading such statements made by preachers what can we expect of others? If ministers of the Gospel don't care about modes, what can be expected by those who are led by such men? Let us be careful in our dealings with God.

"I don't believe in the Dunkards or the Campbellites, or any others as the church, I believe in the pure in heart; for they shall see God." We don't want you or any other man to believe in the Dunkard church; but we want all Christians to believe in the Christian church; not only believe but also be members of the body of Christ. We admit that there are such as call themselves members of the church, who ought not to be such; whose hearts are not pure, just because they only have made a confession with their lips before men, and at the same time have not experienced the change of the heart; therefore they are impure. But how we can get pure by throwing aside God's will which will not suit the carnal mind, rejecting perhaps, one half of what God requires of us, is dark to me. If we are purified it is through obedience to the truth. Outside of God's plan is no purification. There are people living in our age, who adopt some plan to accomplish that purpose for which Jesus came and died. This may do, while the spirit's light and gay, but I am not willing to risk it.

Let us look at the plan of our so-called christian world by which they claim to become pure in heart. Is it the plan laid down in the New Testment? No, but some thing which has been brought into existence by mortal erring man. And what does all this show? Well, it gives us to understand, that the plan laid down by Jesus, our great redeemer, is not worth observing. Talk to these people who so loudly talk of the purity of the heart, that even, in most of their meetings shout, as they say, for joy; talk to them of what the New Testament requires of christians, and in nine cases out of ten these pure, warm, shouting christians ridicule you on the very commands that they must acknowledge are written down in the New Testament. Consider all this, and then claim to be pure in heart, for disobeying God!

But we know our friend lives at a place where this "disobeying the Gospel, purifying doctrines has been preached up, from the very start of the place; and I always will be willing that this must be considered; therefore I make a great deal of allowance in his case. But let us all remember, that the Lord Jesus will be revealed in flaming fire, to take vengance on those that believe not and obey not the Gospel. Here we see what the consequences will be with those who are not willing to obey the Gospel, but get up a plan of salvation of their own. Not the purification of the heart, the pure in heart will see God; not to be punished, but to inherit eternal enjoyment. Now, then, which plan will we choose? The Brethren say, "Trust God's plan rather than man's" and so do all God's people, ever have and ever will. Hope our friend will revel, I know we have men in the Brotherhood, who are not as good, morally, as he is, but all we ask him now is this, read on, read earnestly, read prayerfully, and no doubt God will give the necessary light in due time, if, perhaps like in the case of Paul of old, he sees fit once to make you an apostle even of the Gentiles, as you are now a minister of the Gospel in your estimation, but, I verily believe in error.

Speak the Same Thing and Be of the Same Mind.

The above are parts of the text in 1 Cor. 1: 10, written by our beloved apostle Paul to the church at Corinth; and, I presume, for a good purpose, for the epistles to said church are full of heavy censures and grave charges of wrong upon the part of their religious faith and work: in many things he could not praise them. Among the evils that had crept into the church, was, schismaticalness, breaking up the oneness and simplicity of the church of Christ, of which they were members, into parties; having a party for Paul, one for Apollos, one for Cephas, and one for Christ. The apostle saw these things, and had a perfect knowledge of the great evil that would grow out of such a sectarian spirit; and he feared it, perhaps, yet the more from the fact that the apostles were made the chief cause of the divisions among the brethren there. If this were not so, Paul would have never spoken as he did to these brethren. "Was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Having these sectarianists before our mind's eye, it seems not a hard matter to understand the apostle when he makes use of the above language; for if there is anything in this world that will cause us to speak different, and to have our minds differing from one another, it is this; that we have different leaders. And just as sure as we attach ourselves to any of these schismatical parties, we are inclined to lose sight of the simplicity of the mind of Christ, and will begin to build up one party and tear down the other, and hence cease to speak the same thing. I think we are therefore driven to this conclusion, that those that were for Paul did not speak so highly of Apollos; and those for Apollos, not so highly of Cephas, and vice versa, and those that spake of Christ regarded neither of those apostles, any more than as ambassadors for Christ. However it was not the preaching of those apostles that caused this division among them, for I cannot help but conclude that they preached the same doctrine, the same Gospel, the same Christ. I don't think it was anything else but their personal preferments that caused them to cry as they did, one for Paul, and another for Apollos; for I have long since concluded that if we hold to Christ and his doctrine, we will speak the same thing all over the land, so far as faith and practice based upon the Bible, is concerned. Outside of that men, whether religious or not, may labor for oneness in speech or mind until dooms-day, and all their efforts will prove abortive.

The idea that some men, and Christians too, advance, of having all that believe in Christ one way, should also then speak and think the same in our daily avocations of life, such as plowing, sowing, reaping, marketing, building, &c., is simply preposterous.

The world must stand a good many more centuries than I think it will stand, before men and women will see anything like that, and yet this passage of scripture is brought up to prove that we should speak the same thing, but more especially in that of voting politically; and because the brethren do not all vote alike, they do not speak the same thing, and, therefore, should not vote. I think, in this scripture, there is not much found by which we should be governed in this matter of voting; for, in the first place, the reproof had direct reference to an evil among believers, and not among the world. And, in the second place, if it is to be applied to such a thing as voting, let us put it, or keep it in the church. And here we find ourselves about as much divided in regard to selecting one to serve in an official capacity as the world is; and if a diversity of sentiment, based upon the text above written, is sufficient to set aside a thing because we are not one in expression, it must necessarily set aside our method of electing officers in the church. But instead of this, we hear our old brethren say, on elections of this kind, that they are glad to see that there are so many worthy and well beloved brethren in the church. How do they see this? I answer, by the many different expressions. They would not like it at all in a church, representing about two hundred and fifty members, if they all vote for one, and for one only. Think not, dear brethren, that I am favorable to a political voting, as the world is now, and has been for some time conducting; yet, at the same time, I think when brethren use this scripture, as they generally do, it in many cases proves too much; hence the above. The only great danger I see that the Apostle is trying to arrest, is that of having too many avowed preferments in the church, and especially among the ministry. The way I view it there is a three-fold evil in it. In the first place, it destroys the simplicity which is in Christ, just as sure as this is done. Pride, as a large monster, rises up among us; each party has the smartest man; and be assured, brethren we lose the sameness in speech. In the second place, it is calculated to elevate that preacher to such an extent that he begins to think that he is somebody, and in his pride he begins to think of changing laws and customs, and in place of teaching the doctrines of the Bible and the church, he sets up his own inventions which were begotten in pride and unholy desires for eminence, popularity, and headship, until he finally, in his pride, falleth, oftentimes never to rise, and his followers are brought down in sackcloth and ashes. Yes, brethren and sisters, be careful how you speak in this. If you always attribute these wonders that are wrought among us to God, and to him alone, in place of to weak men, you need not be much afraid of being lead away by man. And in the third place, it is calculated to bring the ordinarily talented man to think so little of himself, that he will bury the talent given him with which to work in his vinyard, until, I fear, some will hear what the undutiful servant had to hear: 'Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." But mark, my dear members, may not that servant in that day rise up against us and say, "Yea, Lord, I did bury my talent, but hear me: I had such a hard master (the church) to please; I done all I could for thy cause, but I could not work to gratify my master (the church). Say what I would, do what I could, nothing satisfied them; was wrong until I yielded to their continued stigmas, and ceased to work, and must I now take my part there." Brethren and sisters, I fear that many a talent has been buried, and souls spiritually maimed, by an undue remark on our part.

In conclusion, let me say, let us pray for the mind that was in our divine Master, and then will we speak the same thing, and have the same mind in all things, doctrinally. That was this: to bring down those elevated feelings that are so apt to rise in men to a point where we can bring the weak in faith, the little ones—yea, the babes in Christ, and set them side by side at the feet of Jesus. A better place than this I know not to bring the Church to, in order to learn them to speak the same thing and be of the same mind. I fear that something like this is coming up again, hence the admonition to you from your weak brother in Christ Jesus our Lord and Savior. Amen.

Ask and Ye Shall Receive.

These beautiful words of our Master, come fraught with such confidence and love to my mind, this calm November evening, that I feel like penning a few lines for the friendly columns of the COMPANION. What rich mines of comfort this scripture affords! "Ask and ye shall receive rest from your grief at the footstool of the throne." Oh, what place of refuge is like this, when heart and flesh fail! Sinner, thou art burdened down with the weight of thy load of sin; thou art trodding the pathway of folly and vice, heaping together the riches of this world, and forgetting that life is transitory. Stop and think how very uncertain life is. We have no time to trifle and the years which so swiftly mingle with the waters of eternity admonish us that the record of our days in the book of God is coming nearer to its close. Then supplicate at a throne of grace, for the promise on record is from the lips of a compassionate Savior. Repent of your sins by obeying the word, for the corruption of your heart lies too deep for anything but the blood of Jesus to wash away. Methinks you could not help to feel, filled with love and sorow, to think how willingly he shed his blood—how often you have refused to wash and be clean. Your evil heart will prompt you to wait a little. Death would not wait a moment, if God would bid him touch your heart-strings; and now, behold, the good Shepherd is waiting for you to ask in faith; then shall you receive and your soul live. But the command is to us all, in every vocation of life, to ask from the Giver of all good, then shall we receive. Though all weakness, our Savior is strong. Though afflictions press hard on our way of life, and we almost feel like sinking under the load, let us remember that a merciful Father is doing all things well; and we have the promise that, if we ask at a throne of grace, we shall receive. There no sincere prayer is disregarded. Then how happy we shall meet, when mortality is swallowed up of life, and those who have stayed each others footsteps in life's pathway, shall rejoice together, clothed in everlasting strength, in the New Jerusalem! Happy place! Happy period! there shall be no more coldness, no more looking back to Sodom, and longing for its deceitful pleasures: but all the powers of the soul will be concentrated in love to him of whose glory and excellence we shall find that half has not been told us. Does not everything seem tinged with redeeming love, when we contemplate the beauty, love, and confidence, that linger in that sentence? The more worthless, the more he helps our infirmities, so that our weakness becomes the cause of an increase of strength; and when we would wander, he speaks in tones of pitying love, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim?" Sweet words to recall the wanderer and bid him ask at a throne of grace! There let us often meet, fellow pilgrims, and so shall our faith be strengthened, and we shall gain a nearer view of that land where the cross is exchanged for the crown, and faint glimpses of our Savior's beauty, for his immediate presence, without a shade of sin to hide him from us.

Charity.

In the common acceptation of the term, the word charity means benevolence, or almsgiving. St. Paul, in the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians, uses the word charity. The word love would better express the meaning, for he intimates that we might give all our goods to the poor, and yet not have charity. According to Webster, the word charity means more than love. He defines it as that disposition of heart which inclines man to think favorably of his fellowman.

Man is naturally proud and haughty, and thinks more highly of himself than of others. It is also much easier for one to see another's faults than to see his own, hence we should strive to attain to that disposition of heart which puts the best possible construction on the motives of our fellowmen.

Brethren and sisters, have we that charity which Paul describes in the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians? That charity which suffereth long and is kind? that envieth not? that seeketh not her own? is not easily provoked, and "thinketh no evil?" Who among us thinketh no evil? We do more than think evil; we speak evil of one another; and when we speak evil of another, whether true or false, we condemn ourselves as lacking charity, without which we are nothing. And again, if we love our brother, and see him in a fault, would it not be more in accordance with the spirit of the gospel to go to him, and tell him his fault privately, than to go at once to the church? If we have that love which "thinketh no evil," and would judge our brother in a spirit of charity, we must consider his surrounding circumstances. We all have our besetting sins, and what is a strong temptation to one, others may not desire. Think of these things, and win the tempted back with love rather than censure so severely, remembering that, with what measure we mete it shall be measured to us again. BARBARA SNOEBERGER.

Obeying God's Word.

In passing from one theme to another, I have endeavored to obey the commands of Christ to consider the wonders of divine Wisdom and Power, by which the word of God is strengthened.

I have endeavored to walk among the beauties and glories of the world with a free and fearless step, and yet with as reverent and teachable a mind as did Adam in the garden of God.

Crecting your attention, dear reader, and to blend yours with mine, I have asked you to go with me out under the starry canopy of the open heavens and learn the speech which day utters to day and the knowledge which night showeth to night.

We have traced the measuring line of God's power, which goes out through all the earth, and we have caught the sound of God's word, which is proclaimed from every pulpit.

We have gazed with rapture on the transfigured face of Jesus on the holy mount.

We have looked out on the green landscape, where God sends his grazing flock to find fresh pasturage on a thousand hills.

We have seen the glory with which God clothes the flowers of spring, and the grass of the field, and we have learned to believe, that he who bestowed such excellent beauty upon the frailest things of earth, will not forget the being whom he made in his own image, and into whose soul he breathed the breath of an immortal life, and on whom he looked and said, "It is well." Oh! what gratitude we owe to our God for his goodness to us! D. A. HETRIC.

BREVITIES.

Most of the shadows crossing our pathway in this life are caused by our standing in our own light.

The injudicious defence of a good cause by its friends, will injure it more than the most violent attacks by its enemies.

A carefully prepared sermon, well delivered, twenty-five minutes in length, is better than a desultory discourse of two hours.

Those who have least to say, sometimes make the most words, and are most anxious to speak. A wise head makes a quiet tongue. A. B. B.

LOST CHILD.

The night comes in, and the storm is wild,
There's a biting blast and a driving sleet,
And up and down each lonely street
The criers call, "Lost child! lost child!"

What, a little one this bitter night
Alone and lost in this howling storm?
Oh God, be merciful, we pray,
And shield the tender form.

Speed, speed thee, rider; scream the cry;
He may be frozen and crushed and dead!
A mother waits for her laughing boy;
And canst thou take her a corpse instead?

Speed, speed thee, rider, mark the print
Of little feet across the snow,
And call the fathers from every house
Upon the search to go.

And while ye seek, let a louder voice,
One that the whole wide world can hear,
Break out above the howling storm
In tones most thrilling, loud and clear.

Lost in the stormy night of sin,
An orphan, the child of his mother's vow:
'Tis years and years since he wandered away;
Christians, turn out and seek for him now.

Lost from a mother one sunny day,
A little girl with a dove blue eye,
She hath lost her way to heaven, and now
She hath fallen in woe to die.

Lost from the pastures many a lamb
That wandered away when the shepherds did sleep;
And now they are roving, God only knows where;
He only can hear their shivering bleat.

Lost, lost! and the night drifts in—
Children more than you'll ever find—
Turn out, turn out, and with pity seek
And bring them in from the storm and the wind.

Perchance your little ones are gone,
And their feet will never turn back again.
Haste, father, haste, and follow their track,
Mark every spot where they have been;
And if ye find them, thank your God!
For many a mother is wailing to-night
For a birdling lots that she'll never find,
Not even in heaven's morning light.

Proposition to the Brethren in the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, I intend to make a proposition to you in the fear of the Lord. Let us show to the world that we have the mind of Christ; that is, "that all men might be saved." I always had somewhat of the missionary spirit, from the fact that, one of the commands of first importance is, to "teach all nations." When the command is complied with, the promise will follow, "I am with you always, even to the end of the world;" but if the command is not obeyed, we cannot expect to realize the promise. My faith is altogether in the promises of God, and these are always connected with commands which precede them.

These are my reasons for making the following proposition. I wish to make another effort in that direction for the benefit of the people, as I feel it to be the duty of the church, and I hope it will be considered by the brethren and sisters in the Lord, that the congregations of the Middle District of Pennsylvania may introduce it at their councils, that their delegates may be prepared to report at the next District Meeting the decision of each individual congregation concerning the matter. I hope my brethren and sisters will seriously consider the matter; looking to duty and the recompense of reward, and not to the purse only. The proposition will be so easy as to be out of the question to injure any one; so, if we can remove the prejudice against the Missionary cause, and have a little more of the Spirit of Christ in its stead, I think we will succeed in the matter. The command is there, "Go and teach all nations," and we cannot remove it: we are all under obligations and unless we are willing to do something towards its observance, I am just as sure that the command will stand against us as I am of the promise following when it is complied with, which, my dear brethren and sisters we are all looking for. Then let us be careful that we do not come short of it. Blessed be God for the happy promises! But do not forget the command preceding every promise. Let us walk in the light, and the blood of Jesus Christ will cleanse us from all sin. May God bless every means of spreading the Gospel of Christ.

My proposition alluded to is this, to buy a house for worship, or to build one in the city of Altoona. I think there is more prospect of success in Altoona than any part around it, if we had a house for worship. The greater part of the city is made up of the working class of people. There are about twelve members, and a great many of our brethren's children living there. It is evident that Altoona will be the principal place for manufacturing stock for the railroad, and that will always give employment to thousands of hands. Those members living there now are very anxious to have a house for worship, and are willing to do what they can toward it. There is a house for sale there, that was built by the United Brethren—a good, substantial, plain house—and a large house. The man who owns it proposes to sell it at cost, and he would like to sell it to the Brethren. There is not style enough about the house for the fashionable churches; therefore I think it could be purchased at cost. But if my brethren and sisters will agree with my plan, the District Meeting would appoint a committee of investigation to decide whether to purchase the house or purchase a lot and build a house.

My plan for raising the necessary means is this. Appoint the ministers of the different congregations agents to collect 50 cents to each member. I know we have some members who could not pay 50 cents; but where there is one such, there are two that could pay a dollar and not miss it. Recollect the conveyance is to be made to the brethren in the Middle District of Pennsylvania, so that all will have an interest in the house; and when our ministers travel through Altoona they will have a place to stop at, by informing the brethren in Altoona. We neighboring congregations would keep up the regular meetings gratuitously.

Useless Adornments.

I have often wondered if some of our professors of religion ever thought of their vow to renounce the vain pomp and glory of the world. What is "pomp?" Our dictionary-makers tell us one of its definitions is "exterior show," and "vain" means "worthless, empty, unsatisfying;" therefore, "vain pomp" means worthless, unsatisfying, exterior show. Does not the fanciful decoration of the person with flowers, feathers, ear-rings, finger-rings, chains, crosses, bunches and humps of dress goods, so arranged as to leave one to conjecture whether the wearers are deformed naturally or artificially, come under the head of "worthless, exterior show"—"vain pomp?" If so, when our sisters, with all these trappings on, approach the table of the Lord, is He pleased to meet them, and does He manifest himself to them in the "breaking of bread" while they are breaking their baptismal vows? Oh! my sisters, think how many suffering ones around you might be relieved by the money lavished on unnecessary adornments; and then, if you can, ask God's blessing on your decorations. Do they make you more Christ-like? Do they make you more meek and lowly? Did you ever see one "poor in spirit" thus bedizened? Can one who bestows so much thought on dress give sufficient attention to the improvement of mind and heart? These are, in my opinion, questions that should not be lightly passed over. I have often thought of the reply made years ago by one of our old preachers to one of his members who asked him if her "bonnet was too gay?" 'Indeed, sister, I don't know; go and ask Jesus." Tears filled her eyes as she said, "I know it is too gay with these feathers; I can't wear it."

My dear sisters, you who have power to prevail with God, will you not pray with all your faith, that the Holy Ghost may come upon the Church, that all the tinsel and frippery may vanish from our midst, and that all our members may clothe themselves in "modest apparel which becometh women professing godliness." It don't do to go to the self-sacrificing Jesus, who left us an example that we should tread in his steps, and ask to be excused for worldliness because we live in an age of progress. He changes not; His word shall not pass away, and He saith, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." Where there is no love of the world, there will be no conformity to its silly fashions, that, it would seem, are invented to test the length to which some will go in foolish extravagance.

The most devout and holy men and women of all ages, have been uniformly simple in dress, manners, and speech; and where there is a love of display, it seems to me, to be owing to a weak head, or an unconsecrated heart, or both. I would not wound, needlessly, the feelings of any one, but the words of the most naturally gifted, have very little weight with with persons in general, when they are uttered by one adorned with gold or pearls, or costly array, or finery o any description May God hasten the day when our women shall bring their jewelry, not to be melted for a golden calf, but to send the bread of life to those who sit in the region and shadow of death—People's Journal.

The Resource against Sin.

What an invaluable resource against our besetting sin, and against all sin, is prayer, by which we renew our confederacy with heaven and bring down omnipotent grace to "our help against the mighty." The instances are innumerable in which prayer has put another spirit into men, and those who were by nature timid, desponding, and irresolute have come from their closets declaring, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." "I believe," says South, "there is none who ever kneeled down to this duty with a good heart, and performed it well, but rose up with a better. If he came to it with desires against his sin, he went away with strength added to his desires." Paul tells us this was his own experience in the matter of "the thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan sent to buffet him." In answer to his three-times-repeated prayer, he obtained such promise of heavenly aid as made him ready to glory even in his infirmities. Even a brief ejaculatory prayer, when no other divine expedient was at hand, has been sufficient ere now to make a man a conquerer over his besetting temptation. It is recorded of the late eminent Mr. Hall, of Bristol, that when on one occasion he felt himself on the point of being betrayed into 'speaking unadvisedly with his lips," he retired to a corner of his library in which he had been conversing with his brethren, and was overheard repeating again and again the prayer, "O Lamb of God, calm my perturbed spirit."—He then returned to his brethren with his mind tranquilized, and his "face shining as it had been the face of angel,"—Dr. Thomson.

Effects of Circumstances.

In nine cases out of ten, crime is no proof of special depravity apart from general depravity, and that the circumstances have just so much weight as this, that put you or me in those same circumstances in nine cases out of ten, we should be criminals too. In the same circumstances involves a great deal. It involves an hereditary taint stamped in the very mould of birth, it involves physical misery, it involves intellectual and moral destruction—it involves the worst kind of social influence—it involves the pressure of all the natural appetites, rioting in this need of the body and this darkness of the soul. And it implies no suspicion of a man's moral standard—it is no insult to his self-respect to tell him that, under similar conditions, it is extremely probable he would have been a criminal too. Reasoning in an arm-chair is very proper, and often very accurate, but the logic of starvation is too peremptory for syllogisms. We have grown up in pure light and air, appeased with the comforts, and braced by at least the current morality of society. But, concerning those degraded ones, what some call "charity" is no more than "justice." It is no more than justice to say—all the conditions being considered—that, as to a vast majority of them, crime is no proof of special depravity. It is the genuine humanity that is there, not base metal. It came from the common mint, somewhere you will find upon it a faint scar of the Divine Image—but the coin was pitched into the bonfire of appetite and blasphemy, and it has come out a cinder. God made them complete souls, and stamped His Image upon them—but they have fallen into the dark and dreary ways—the fierce flames have hardened them—the foul air has tainted them—and their special depravity, over and above the common depravity, is the infection of circumstances.—Rev. E. H. Chapin.

Working for Christ.

My brother, opposite to your name on the church roll stand these words: "Servant of Jesus Christ." Underneath it methinks I see a pierced, blood-stained hand write, 'Occupy till I come. If thou art faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." The night cometh when you cannot work. Keep your hand to the plow until death loosens its grasp; and when the night comes on, you will find that the sleep of the laboring man is sweet.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Our Chief Men.

The following from the pen of C. Kendrick, we clip from the A. C. Review, thinking it might call the attention of our readers to a fact that is too little thought of. We are still inclined to have our Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas; and we should be very careful, lest we exalt men of low piety even above Christ.

Among the Jews there was one high priest and many chief priests. The chief priests were the leaders of the several causes, and the chiefs and rulers, by virtue of their natural and acquired abilities. So there were "chief men" among the apostles and in all the churches, and there are leaders or chief men in every community.

It is a fact also that there is, and has always been, a disposition in the masses of the people to look up to and be led by their chief men. Anciently the Lord complained of them: "The leaders of my people cause them to err." While it is natural, and, with certain limitations, proper, to have and to look to the chief men, it is still dangerous. Though the responsibility is so fearful, there has always been a disposition to assume it. The apostle James would not favor this aspiration. He said: "My brethren, be not many masters" (teachers or leaders). "In many things we offend all;" and if a leader errs, and his error is copied, the evil is more than duplicated, and he must, in a measure at least, account for all that follows.

Since, then, we have, and will have, our chief men, it is right and proper that we should understand well

THEIR QUALIFICATIONS.

Under this head let us note what are assumed and what the people take to be leading qualifications.

1. If a man is really learned, or if he merely assumes to be, he feels and many at once grant him some capacity as a leader. And whilst learning is of great importance, it is well to remember that many full graduates of the best colleges are utterly unsafe and unreliable in all relations of life. Some of them, indeed are liliputians in real intellect, and monomaniacal in actions. And another fact of equal importance: many of the most useful and safe men, in Church and State, have not been and are not now learned men in the popular sense of this phrase.

2. Eloquent preachers and politicians are taken as leaders. But eloquence, as it is generally understood, is not a safe quality or attainment. If we consider well its history, and, with this before us, look into the future state, it is hardly desirable. It deceives its possessor and those he sways. Many eloquent men have led only to ruin.

3. Wit, sarcasm and logical power, especially when combined, are taken as suitable traits for a leader. They attract attention and give one power with man. But these, unsanctified, are only means for evil.

4. Real goodness, purity of heart and life seem to be presented in the Scriptures as the traits of character to be looked to in those we may copy. And whilst one may have this—as the humblest saint does—without being capable of being a chief man in any community, yet no one should be regarded as a chief man without this, whatever else he may have. Is he good, is he conscientious, is he wholly devoted to the honor of God and the good of the people? Or, is he selfish, ambitious, resentful? Does he ever state what is not strictly true? Does he prevaricate, or keep back that which is due even an enemy? Does he pervert the words or actions of those he opposes?

Here, I think, much needs to be said. Where, among all our strong and bitter opposers, is there one that does not misrepresent us, and persist in it? And among ourselves, where has there been one that has, in any measure, "gone out from us," and persisted in it, that has not shown the same disregard for truth and justice? Good and great men err, but they will come back. Recently I have been cheered and encouraged by seeing statements from some of our chief men to the effect that "we have said hard things of our brethren, have used too severe language, and are determined to do so no more."

Now the one single point I desire to urge is, that before allowing any man to exercise an influence over us as a chief man or leader, we shall observe his life; we shall have the clearest evidence that he will not wrong his opponent to gain a triumph; that he will not pervert his language, or withold from him any due; and that, if he gets out of the wrong, he will not persist in the wrong. Bad men are dangerous. They are dangerous everywhere.

A prominent lawyer recently remarked, after witnessing certain bad developments, that there was no reason to doubt that many men go to the grave with the reputation of honest men, who only lacked an opportunity to prove themselves thieves. There are many wolves with sheep's clothing. And there are men who will maintain a very decent respect for justice and right in most particulars, who will still falsify and otherwise commit the grossest wrongs in certain departments. None such should be regarded as chief men.

That which distinguishes the God of the Bible above all gods is his purity. That which, more than anything else, distinguishes the Christian religion is its purity. In its light the impure man is as nothing, no matter what commendable qualities he has. With all the rest good, if destitute of this, he is "as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal."

In applying this test we can scarcely be too severe if we allow forgiveness to the erring. All err, but only those lacking moral purity persist in error—only these choose to err. Think, then, of the "under-shepherds" who are set as "examples of the flock," as "patterns for the believers," and say, who are they?

For the COMPANION.

John's Baptism.

"And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism." Acts 19: 30.

There is perhaps no text in the whole Testament that is as much misconstrued, as the above. Most persons conclude that those men were baptized with John's baptism, and thus put John the Baptist to naught. Brethren, read it carefully and prayerfully. It does not say with John's baptism, but "unto John's baptism." I, for one; firmly believe that John's baptism was in unison with the commission, Matthew 28: 19, or how can he be "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God?" Mark 1: 1. Now, brethren, consider well before you put John to naught, of whom Jesus himself said, "Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater prophet than John the Baptist." "He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall receive a prophet's reward;" and he that denieth a prophet, of course, receives the reverse.

The Sunday-School Teacher's Dream.

I never shall forget the night—last August was a year. I went to the Sunday-school, as usual, in the morning, but the heat was oppressive; there was not a breath of air stirring. My class seemed unusually restless and inattentive, and I felt an inexpressible languor, which I am sure they could not help observing. Once or twice I forgot the questions I had asked; and several times I had to require a repetition of the answers, which I might have heard at first if I had not been unaccountably stupid. In the afternoon I was half inclined to stay at home, but my conscience loudly remonstrated, and I went to school as usual. I found only three of my class present, and I was glad when the hour arrived to relive me from my post. In the evening I retired from my room at the accustomed hour, and entered upon my private exercises of devotion. I was sensible that the day had been a very long and tedious one. I felt that I had not only failed to make any progress myself in the divine life, but that I had been unusually negligent in my duty towards my class. I tried to satisfy myself that my spirit was willing, but conscience told me that through all the six preceding days (and every one of them had been excessively warm) I had applied myself to business without this sense of weariness; and I knew, if I should live, that I should probably return to my worldly pursuits the next day with the same spirit and activity. Why this languor, then, in the service of God, and the affairs of the soul, and not elsewhere? When I attempted to pray for God's gracious acceptance of my labors, I felt condemned and ashamed; and, after commending myself, in a very hurried and formal manner, to the divine forgiveness and protection, I went to bed. But sleep was far from me. The uneasiness of my conscience, and the thought that I might possible never see my class again, greatly troubled me. At last, however exhausted with the extreme heat, and a sort of nervous irritability, I insensibly sunk to sleep, and dreamed that I was borne upward to the blessed abode of the righteous; the beautiful city of eternal life appeared covered with a soft and resplendent light, so bright and dazzling, that the gates and towers upon the walls were but indistinctly seen. It was indeed a glorious sight: and my soul was filled with rapture at the thought of dwelling in that blessed abode. I went to the nearest gate, which stood open and saw for a moment the streets of the city. They looked as if they were overlaid with one seamless covering of pure gold, transparent as glass, the light was different from anything I had ever seen, it seemed indescribably pure and soft, and yet so searching, that it seemed as if it must reveal the most secret recesses of the place, the thought of exposing myself to its penetrating power made me shrink back, and at that moment some one who seemed to have charge of the entrance, asked me if I wished to come in. I replied that I was afraid I was unfit for so pure a place. He inquired, in the most gentle manner, if I had been washed in the blood of the Lamb. I told him I had been long a professed follower of his, and hoped I had an interest in his merits. After a moment's pause, I was directed to step into an apartment, which was a short distance from me, and told to wait there until I was invited to come into the heavenly city. I saw two or three other persons in the place, and in one I recognized the countenance of a fellow laborer in the Sabbath-school, and he was being addressed by a lad close by, and as I listened, he was charging his teacher with unfaithfulness to his scholars and telling him that by his carelessness about their soul's salvation had made them careless, and now they were lost, lost, and were to go from that place to one of endless woe, and his last words were "Shall not my blood be required at your hands?" To every thoughtless teacher (and I fear there are such to be found in our ranks) how dreadful is the rebuke. I awoke to find it was but a dream, but it left an impression that never wore off, and I trust made me more faithful to my class.—Selected.

The Trials of Life.

A story of the trials of life, and the conflicts of the mind, is related in about the following manner:

Once, upon a time, there was a man who did not just fare so well in this world. He labored under a distressed state of mind; he was wearied with dark and gloomy thoughts, and ultimately, sank into such a deep state of despair, that life itself only seemed to be a burden, and he concluded to work himself out of the way.

To carry this determination into effect, he concluded to go some distance away from his home. He wended his way along a certain road; and, as he was passing on, he was approached by a barefooted little girl, who asked him for some assistance, in about these words. "Please, give me some money to buy mother some bread."

"Well," thought he, "money is not of much use to me;" and so he concluded it was just as well he should comply with the request. He handed her some money, and then he saw how she was so highly pleased.

Having received the money and being just at the point of leaving, she ventured to make another request, and said, "Please, sir, come and see where mother lives." "Well," thought he, "I may just as well go along."

They proceed on, and soon reached the place of abode. Entering the small house, he found a sick woman lying on her bed. The little girl very soon told the story, how the man who had come had given them some money to buy bread. Then too, the mother was very glad to know that they had obtained some assistance.

When the man now saw how much relief the little money he gave, afforded these persons in their distressed condition, he felt an inclination to do still more towards supplying their wants, and he gave them more money. Being brought to reflect how much distress there is found in the world, and what a singular effect his money had to make other people happy, he arrived at the conclusion that it was still worth while to live a while longer, and he came away a changed man. NOBILITY OF LABOR.—Hardly anything is more contemptible than the conceit which rests upon social position; the conceit of those who imagine that they are thus divorced from the clay of common men; of those who shrink with horror from the idea of work, as something which degrades by its contact, and yet who very likely owe their present position to some not very remote ancestor, who, recognizing his call to work, lived more honestly in the world than they do, and was not ashamed of soiled thumbs. It is one of the meanest things for people to be ashamed of the work which glorified their ancestors more with their soiled aprons and black gowns, than they with their fine ribbons and flashing jewelry. It might be a fine thing to be like the lilies, more gloriously clothed than Solomon, and doing nothing as if we were lilies. Advantageous position is only a more emphatic call for work; and while those who hold the advantage may not be compelled to manual drudgery, they should recognize the fact that manual drudgery may be performed in the same spirit as that which characterizes their own work, and therefore that it is equally honorable.—Dr. Chapin.

Christian Family Companion

DALE CITY, PA., Dec. 3, 1872.

Christian Family Companion.

The above title has become familliar to thousands of our readers; but, perhaps, comparatively few have ever thought much about its grand significance. It is our purpose in this article to notice briefly the meaning of the name of our paper; and we hope, by so doing, to induce our subscribers and readers to become still more attached, not only to the name, but also to the paper bearing it. The signification of the name will be brought out more fully by emphasizing the different words composing it.

1. Christian Family Companion. By placing emphasis upon the word Christian, it indicates the Character of the paper: it is to be Christ-like; bearing the character and breathing the spirit of Christ. Christ's mission was to save sinners; and this, too, is the mission of the COMPANION. Christ was self-sacrificing, humble, meek, gentle, kind, zealous, wise, loving. Our paper is designed to bear and maintain this same character. This being the case, how careful should we be when we take up our pens to write for its pages. The mind of both contributors and editors should be imbued with the spirit of Christ; for it is only in this way that the paper can breathe this spirit. Let those who write for our columns ever bear in mind, and always try to write just what Christ would have said or written on their particular theme, had he been under their circumstances. We think, if this rule were more closely adhered to, our paper might be somewhat improved, and it would soon become a powerful auxiliary in carrying forward the great work which Christ came to accomplish. The character of the paper will be just what those who write for it make it; and thus it stands as a faithful witness of the spirit and character of the writers. As water cannot rise above its level, so the spirit of the paper cannot rise above the spirit of those who make it.

2. Christian Family Companion. When you read it thus, it means that it is a Christian Companion for the family. As families are composed of various members, as parents, children, and servants, so the paper is designed to bring advice, instruction, encouragement, as well as reproof and correction, to every member of the family. Hence we want useful lessons adapted to persons under all the different relations and circumstances in life. We want something for old and young, rich and poor, sick and well, male and female; in short, we want matter suited to the condition of everybody.

3. Christian Family Companion. A companion is an associate, a partner; not a pilgrim or traveler, who may stop with you once, or, perhaps, oftener in a life-time, not a visitor, who gives you occasional, or, it may be, frequent calls, but an associate or partner, who is to be with you constantly, to afford you company, to tender you advice, and to give you aid. This is the design of our paper; and this it will do, if you accept of it as a Companion. But, of course, as it is poor and cannot go everywhere and perform all this service without aid, it becomes the duty of those who delight in its association to give it some encouragement. All that is required is $1.50 per annum. Then, as a matter of course, if it is a companion to you, you are also a companion to it, and if it affords you lessons of instruction, it is your duty to return the compliment.

4. Christian Family Companion. Reading it in this way, adds a new and interesting feature. It is not only a Christian companion for the family, but a companion for the Christian family. This is as it should be. Companionship is more congenial when the parties concerned bear the same character—are prompted by the same motives—moved by the same spirit. The readers of our paper should be Christians—Christ-like in their dispositions, temperaments, aims, and efforts. They should not expect their COMPANION to be nearer perfect than themselves. If they have still some faults, and are liable to take some wrong steps, they should be willing to make the same allowance for their COMPANION. A Christian Companion for a Christian Family, is the summary of the meaning of CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION. What Christian, or what Christian family, would not wish to have such a COMPANION?

In conclusion, we wish to say to all our readers, that, as the current volume of the COMPANION is rapidly drawing toward its close, we hope you will lose no time in renewing your subscription for the next volume; and that you will use your ability and influence to make our paper all that its name implies. Give us your prayers, your advice, your encouragement, and your hearty support. Will you not do for the COMPANION what you can, and do it now? Could you not ask your brethren, your friends and neighbors, to subscribe for the paper? It does seem to us that if a strong effort should be made, by all of our friendly readers, the list of subscribers could be doubled the coming year. Hoping for the best, and awaiting the result, we close for the present. J. W. B.

The End at Hand.

The end of the present volume is very near at hand. Only two more numbers and volume eight will be complete. We have, at least, so far, furnished our volumes with fifty numbers. One subscriber out of the forty-three hundred that are now receiving the COMPANION, however, insists upon the fifty-two numbers; but we will try to have him reconciled in some other way. It is almost impossible, in our way of doing business—having the subscriptions nearly all expire and renewed at the first of January—to publish fifty-two numbers. But we know our friends do not expect it of us, nor is that the subject we wish to speak about.

In a few weeks more our present subscription list will expire, and new books will be opened. For the past two years we have used the same books. They are now too much worn, and crowded, and hence new ones have been secured. We should be pleased to transfer all our old patrons' names into the new books; but they will remember that it is our will to continue their subscriptions only at their own request. And we once more inform them that it would be a very great convenience to us to have the subscriptions renewed before the old list has expired. will they not be kind enough to give us the benefit of this advantage. It may not incommode them in the least to send the money a few weeks earlier, while it would be a great accommodation to us.

We are receiving words of encouragement from many places. Our agents say the prospects never were better. Some who had left us, and from curiosity, or persuasion had taken the other papers, are anxious to return to the COMPANION, declaring they can get better satisfaction than anywhere else. And so they will all think by and by. The COMPANION is emphatically the Brethren's paper. It shows equal deference to old and young, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, high and low—if there is such a thing among us; and it is sometimes to be feared there is. We have lost some supporters because of our liberality in this matter; but to it we attribute the success of our paper. It is not our province to say: "My brother you are too young yet to talk upon such subjects." Or to my sisters: "Ye must not write upon religion; women should keep silent." But it becomes us to hear (prove) all, and receive the good. This, by the grace of God, shall be a leading feature of our paper, as long as it is under the control of its founder and present proprietor.

Our readers will please observe that our next Annual meeting will be held in the congregation in which the COMPANION is published, and, most likely, in the same town. It will, therefore, announce all the arrangements pertaining to it, and publish a report of its proceedings.

Now is the time to work. Brethren, sisters, and friends, our success depends upon your efforts. Our living is in your hands. If you will exert yourselves to increase our circulation, we shall be prosperous; if you are indifferent, we shall fail. We shall hope for the better.

As the following was crowded out of the correspondence department, and as many of our readers feel interested in the Maine Mission, we give it room under the editorial head. Our missionaries are zealous, and we are glad to learn that the Lord is prospering their way. A. C.

Missionary Correspondence.

Dear brothers and sisters, grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto us all, through the knowledge of God the Father and of our Lord Jesus Christ, both yours and ours. We feel and daily try to thank God, for the manifest tokens of His love and mercy toward us since we left our distant homes; which mercies we ascribe, first, to His goodness, drawn daily by our united prayers; for we think we feel the benefit and efficacy of the prayers of our dear brethren and sisters.

Our first report was written on the 11th ult. at the house of friend C. Withee. Visited the family of friend James Burwood (Brittons by birth, and Episcopalians). Met the warmest reception, and after supper, (or after tea as here used,) the whole family accompanied us to meeting at the wharf meeting-house. This is an excellent house of worship, about 55x35, well laid of in seats, or pews, &c. The foundation wall, or under-pinning of the house attracted our attention, which consists of a trench filled with small stones, then raised up with beautiful granite stones about 18 in. high, and from 3 to 8 ft. long. On the one side, nine of these stones reach from end to end. After meeting, went home with friend Rufus Smith. His wife is a member of the Methodist church. Enjoyed excellent accommodations.

Nov. 12th. To-day was wet. Returned by friend B. again, when they proved their affection to us by an unmistakable proof. Took supper with friend Wellington(Methodist). Thence to friend Jos. Frederic's near Blackwell school-house, where we had an appointment for the evening; but being quite wet we did not go out; but we had a very pleasant, and we think, profitable visit with the family. Now we were on our former circuit; so we will not particularize, in point of time, name or place.

The interest in the meetings continued, gradually to increase. On Sunday, 17th, there were two appointfor Elder Carr, who had failed two weeks before, when we filled his place. He was present, and politely invited us to take his place; which we did, by one occupying in the forenoon and the other in the afternoon. In the evening they had prayer-meeting. We went there. Elder Carr again invited us to take the meeting into our hands, but we considered it inexpedient, and so declined. He opened the exercises, and spoke awhile. In his discourse he took occasion to speak of narrow-mindedness, and spread out his "cloak of charity" so broad and wide as to include all that do as they believe, whether baptist or pedo-baptist, (he being a Baptist).

Last night we had meeting at friend J. M. Adams's again. He attended. We offered him the same courtesy that he had to us, but he refused; so, after we had spoken, he got up and made some remarks, and in doing so made a misapplication of scripture facts in order to get a broader "plank" to stand upon. But we did not give way to him no not an inch. So there was some altercation of words; but we experienced that we had the sympathies of at least a part of the congregation. But it was an unpleasant task. It is said by some, that opposition is the life of business if that holds good in our case, then we may look for quite a lively time.

Since our last report we had but one wet day, that was on the 12th. On the night of the 14th we had about 2 inches snow, of which there is still some lying. The greater part of the time since it fell it has been clear, and some nights quite cold, but not stormy. The majority of professors here are called "Free-will Baptist." Even they are split in two. There are also a few Old-school and Calvinistic Baptists, Adventists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Spiritualists, &c.

While writing we are in the house of Thomas Rowe, an advent professor. We received the best attention and care at the hands of those with whom we have lodged and sojourned. We have not decided how long to stay here, or when we will return. Our love to all the dear brethren and sistrrs; and we still desire to be remembered in their prayers. Farewell,

To Brother P. S. Newcomer.

Dear Brother in Christ: You are an entire stranger to me; have never seen you, and know nothing about you, only that I saw several letters or essays in the COMPANION, written by you. One in No. 28, relative to a little dissatisfaction you had caused by writing out a few references in order to aid you in preaching, caused me to sympathize with you, and I wish to offer you a few words of encouragement.

I concur with you in being opposed to reading sermons, but can see no impropriety in premeditation, nor in pursuing the course you did in order to procure means to assist you in having your sermon properly connected. I think the brethren ought to use lenity in this matter, especially with new beginners. It is not an easy matter for all new beginners to rise in the presence of a congregation without becoming more or less embarrassed; when perhaps if they had a little something to which they could refer, they might be spared much unnecessary anxiety. If some more of our ministers would enter into the spirit of premeditating and inditing, they might perhaps accomplish a little more good, but no doubt they think it savors too much of the world. Some may view it in that light, but if you were actuated by pure motives, I do not think any one should take offense. For my part, if I were to get up to preach I would be very apt to forget what I intended to say, if I did not have something to fall back upon, to keep me on the right track. But we cannot all see alike, therefore it would seem necessary for us all to use much forbearance, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Do not be discouraged, brother. "Let none of these things move you." Endeavor to keep a clear conscience, trusting in the Lord. Remember "he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Psa. May the Lord lead you by the truth of his word, and give you an understanding heart, that you may rightly divide the word of truth, that famishing souls may receive their portion of meat in due season. Please remember unworthy me in your prayers. When I examine my poor heart, I find it as a cage of unclean birds: so many things there contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Oh! when shall I be fully clothed upon with his righteousness? for I feel that my righteousness is as filthy rags in his sight. May the Lord so guide our steps that we may reach that brighter and better world, where sorrow never enters. I close. I have said more, perhaps, already, than you will appreciate. This may not be confidential, therefore please excuse me for withholding my name.

Farewell, your sister,

S. E. A.

TO SISTER S. E. A.—

Your missive of sisterly love and mercy, came duly to hand, incognito. Although your name to me is involved in mystery, it is enough for me to feel assured that your happy position is that of a sister in Christ—a member of the fraternity with which I claim an humble connexion.

I truly appreciate your kind sympathy, in reference to the matter to which you allude, in COMPANION No. 28, in which was contained an expression of my views upon that especial and much abused question; which savors much of prejudice unwarrantable, usurping the better judgment of those who file exceptions. I fully endorse your views, that, with many of our brethren there is not premeditation enough for a good, substantial, edifying discourse, connected in all its parts: but every one has the privilege of enjoying his own opinion, which I do not challenge, but claim the same magnanimity at their hands.

I was elected minister under solemn protest, for reasons of the most substantial character, to all of which was lent a deaf ear, much to my perplexity: and this being so, if there is any talent existing within me, and that can only be developed in this peculiar way, and such service suffering under protest of my dear brethren, I only calmly ask them to revoke my election, and place me back in the private ranks of the humble soldiers of Christ, where any effort of mine in the connexion referred to will cease to trouble those who have been so unfortunately exercised thereby. Feeling that this is the only way I can serve them profitably, as my little fund of knowledge seeks development in this channel, obstruct my course, and inactivity is the hopeless consequence, and systematical construction falls to the ground, overwhelmed by unfounded prejudice, and preconceived opinions.

I am again reminded to thank you for your kind encouragement: and if this characterized the spirit of the brethren, stronger efforts might be the result. But smarting under the goads of prejudice, it unnerves me for the contest, and I relapse into the happy consciousness of having done no violence to the word of God, or to my own feelings, inspired with the desire to throw in the widow's mite, that may redound toward the edification and salvation of souls and the advancement of God's glory.

I should be most happy, dear sister, to cultivate your personal acquaintance, and commune with you individually as well as spiritually; hence you can feel the happy assurance that, although your given name remains unrevealed, the precious affinity of the name of "sister in Christ" has a charmed resting place in my heart: and if we never enjoy the pleasure of an acquaintance, on earth, may our spirits, among the just made perfect, finally mingle together in ascriptions of perfected praise to him who was made to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, claiming legal inheritance to that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, the sanctified recipients of the gift of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Fraternally yours, in the bonds of fellowship and love in Christ.

PETER S. NEWCOMER.

Letter of Condolence.

Dear Brother Helsinger:—You will please find enclosed the copy of a letter written to me, for the consolation of us who have lately been bereft of one of our number. I send it to you, that it may find room in the columns of your paper.

Your sister in Christ.

CALLIE B. BOSSERMAN.

Dunkirk, Ohio.

Dear Sister in Jesus:—Notwithstanding the weak effusions of my pen have so frequently been communicated to a vast number of our dear brethren and sisters, some of which are now in eternity, I feel at a loss this evening how to address you. God knows that I have no other motive than to give what you so much desire; no other motive to prompt me to action than to advance the cause of His dear Son. Oh, the opportunities for doing good! This morning, while all alone, meditating upon the wondrous love of God, who sent his only Son into a world stained with crime, to suffer, bleed, and die, that those who must die can live again, a friend came into my room, and handed me the letter bearing the sad tidings of the death of your own dear brother. Again was I reminded, (with what solemnity, too!) of the brevity of mortal life. I had heard of the death of brother Daniel before I received your letter. Brother Fredric, from your county, told me of it. So I knew the tidings your letter would bear. Oh! death thou art a reaper that knowest no mercy? Like a mighty torrent thou art carrying thy victims to the grave, But, "blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Over such thou hast no claims. "Die in the Lord?" Yes, your dear brother has died in the Lord. From what acquaintance I had with him I dare not doubt his having been a Christian; and though you shall miss him very much, I am persuaded that you all will now get a little nearer to Christ. I want to tell you before I shall close this letter that the happiest Christian in the world is the one that is brought nearest the Cross. Your affections will be more centered in heaven, because a loved one of your own happy number has added one more to those gone to the Paradise of God. Such scenes bring us right to the foot of the cross. While health remains we are apt to get away from Christ; but after death hath visited us, we are brought near—very near—unto Him. Our closet then is the dearest place on earth. There we can talk with God. There we remember His cause. There we remember our sins. There we ask God to come so near that he may take us by the hand and lead us, with our backs turned to the scoffs of a proud, a vain world, right on in the narrow way to glory. Ah! is it not there that we almost feel to ask God to let us remain? But thanks be to His great Name, though there we cannot stay, yet we need not leave "heavenly places." We can "pray without ceasing," by always keeping our minds pure and prayerful. Nor need we only "sit in heavenly places;" we can stand in them, walk in them, work in them, and at night lie down in them to rest while guardian angels watch our silent breathing.

Your kind brother, you say, you miss everywhere. I believe you. Not only do you miss him at home at the fire-side, at the table, or, perhaps, at the old Bible-stand, poring over the sacred pages, for a while explaining a portion of it to you or asking you some questions, thus exchanging opinions until it is time to get ready for Sabbath-school, there to take charge of your classes, and tell them what you have learned; but you miss him when mingling in society wherever you go. But why dwell so long here. Why call to memory such scenes alone. Let us now turn to a brighter side.

On the last page of your letter you said, "Any consolation that you can give will be thankfully received." Undoubtedly so; but this is something, perhaps, I could receive better than give. Would that I could give my pen into the hand of some aged pilgrim, whose long experience in the church of the Living God might enable him to give better consolation. I am so young. I can't do anything more than the weakest babe in Christ; that is, point you to Christ. But happy am I to know that I can do that. Is not that enough? Is it it not enough to know that there is one who is able to save though we must needs "walk through the valley and shadow of death?" Oh! lean upon His strong arm. Lean upon His cross. Death is not always so painful after all. All who are Christians "are dead, and their life is hid with Christ in God." Col. 3: 3. Happy thought. Your brother had died—died unto sin—long before his departure out of this world. But,

> "It is not death to die,
> To leave this weary road,
> And 'midst the brotherhood on high,
> To be at home with God."

Paul says that, when sin hath finished its work, it bringeth forth death." But your brother, whose quiet form now lies beneath the clods of the valley, allowed not sin to finish its work in his mortal body. With his back turned to the pride, the vanities and hidden pleasures of this world, he started out in the service of Christ, by following him down into the chilly waters. He hid his life—a life of enjoyment that the world knows not of—"with Christ in God." And now, since God in his wisdom has seen fit to call him from this vale of tears to where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest," be patient, ever "looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down on the right hand of God." "The time is short." Hold out faithful a few more years, and you, too, can bid farewell to all the cares of mortal life, to enjoy thenceforth the inexpressible happiness of eternal life, where there is no more death, no more weeping, no more pain, and where no more tears shall flow at the departure of loved ones; for death can never enter there. Do not lose sight of the cross. Let the death of dearly loved ones ever be fresh to our memory. Such a thought will keep us close to God; It will solemnly impress our minds, that away from Christ there is no happiness. When I think how much I shall miss your kind brother, I can sympathize with you. No more shall I receive his kind letters; no more shall I meet him at the Annual Meeting of our beloved fraternity. But thanks be to God, we can all meet around the throne of God in heaven. But my sheet is about full. By referring you to Job 7: 8, 9, 10; 20: 9; and then, that you may be consoled, to 2 Sam. 12: 23; Ps. 23: 4 Job 3: 17, Ps. 116: 15, Prov. 11: 8, Jno. 11 ch., Rom. 6; 7, 2 Tim. 4: 6–6, Rev 14: 13. I must close for this time. What I have written for one I have written for all.

Your brother in Christ.

Errors.

BROTHER HOLSINGER: In COMPANION No. 44, current volume. I notice a few mistakes, in my article, under the heading "Christian Sabbath." It was written in reply to a query stated in No. 33: the print says "23." And in the quotation, from Rev. 1: 10, read "The Lord's day," instead of "The Lord's Supper," as there was nothing said about supper in the above cited passage of John's vision on the Isle of Patmos.

Truly, "to err is human, but to forgive is divine."

Yours, in charity,

MARY LIVINGSTON.

Scalpleval, Pa.

Elder John H. Umstead wishes the Brethren in general to know that the state of his health at present is, and for some time has been, such, that he is not able to write: but he also wishes them to understand that, although he cannot write to them it will give him a great deal of pleasure to receive letters from the brethren.

BROTHER HENRY:—For the benefit of the suffering, if you insert it, I send the following

Cure For Dropsy.

Take the fresh root of Dandelion, wash and slice, from two to five ounces. Pour boiling water upon it, and allow it to draw, (not boil), for an hour or two beside the fire. Dose, 2 or 3 cupfuls during the day, until the desired effect is produced. As regards the diet, it should be light and nutritious, and the drink nothing but water or black tea. While you use the Dandelion you should not use the black tea.

Proposed Visit.

No providential interference, I expect to be at Pottstown, Pa, on the evening of the 7th of January, 1873, to remain with the brethren at Coventry about a week.

Eldorado, Pa. GRABILL MYERS,

From Eastern Ohio.

Brother Henry:— For the satisfaction of our brethren and sisters, I will say, that on the first of November, brother Conrad Kahler and I took the cars at Louisville for Columbiana, where we arrived at 7 P. M. We were met by brother Eli Rolman, who took us to his house where we met his family, and found all well. On the next morning, November 2d, we were conveyed to the Brethren's meeting-house, in the Mahoning congregation, to assist in holding a communion meeting. There we met with our aged brother, Elder Henry Kurtz, and the sister, his wife. They were both in general good health. We also met with brother John Swihart, from Richville, Stark county, Ohio. Brethren I. L. Glass and Simon Stukey were also present. Most of the members of that branch were in attendance. In the morning the assembly was small, but in the evening the house was well filled. We had a very pleasant communion.

Next morning, the Lord's day, we were conveyed to the Brethren's new meeting-house, near Lewistown in the same congregation. There we had meeting for the first time in the new house. This we consider a very commodious, plain, yet well-finished house. It is situated on high ground, well adapted for a church-yard, and a grave-yard close to the house. After meeting, a goodly number of brethren accompanied brother Kurtz to his house for dinner. After dinner brother Stukey and I took the cars to Alliance; thence to brother Byers', where we lodged. Next morning we bade farewell, and took the cars for Louisville, where I met with Joseph Keim, who conveyed me to brother John Summers', a deacon in the Canton congregation. He had met with a sad accident by his team running away. He was near by and endeavored to stop it; but he missed his his hold, was caught, and had one of his limbs broken. He was picked up for dead. Some of his children who saw him before he had revived and regained his consciousness, were very much alarmed. One of his daughters, about twelve years of age, took sick from the effects of the excitement, and for a few days she was not expected to live; but when I left, she was some better. May the good Lord give them grace to bear their affliction, and restore them to their former health again, is my prayer.

In the Canton congregation, Stark county, Ohio, October 30th, MARY KEIM, wife of brother Josiah Keim. She was a daughter of our worthy friends Joseph and Lydia Bossler, living near the Centre meeting-house, where our worthy sister Mary is buried. She united with the church when quite young, but still she was not without her troubles and trials on the way; and for the last year, she suffered a great deal with consumption, which finally took her to her silent grave. She bore her afflictions with a Christian fortitude. She never murmured nor complained, but had a strong desire to be absent from the body and present with the Lord. She had no children to leave, but a loving husband and dear parents, to mourn their loss, which we hope is her eternal gain. Funeral occasion improved, to a very large concourse of people, from Col. 3: 3, by Conrad Kahler and the writer.

In Chippewa congregation, Wayne county, Ohio, Oct. 21st, with palsy, our aged brother JOHN BAUGHMAN, age 79 years, 7 months and 19 days. Funeral improved by the writer, and others.

J. B. SHOEMAKER.

In the Indian Creek branch, Westmoreland county, Pa. October 23rd, our much beloved sister BARBARA OBER, aged 54 years Her death was very sudden. She walked to the barn where the men were engaged in killing a beef, dropped down and soon expired. This again speaks to us, "Be ye also ready." Occasion improved by the writer, from Thess. 4: 14.

D. D. HOMER.

In the Upper Canawago branch, Adams county, Pa. brother DANIEL BAKER, aged 59 years, 9 months and 13 days. Disease, pneumonia. Brother Baker was a consistent member of the church; living as a deacon for a number of years. Previous to his death he expressed himself willing to die; and he rested in the glorious hope of a blessed resurrection. He has left a sorrowing sister and ten children to mourn the loss of a loving husband and kind father. But we trust their loss is his eternal gain. Funeral discourse by the brethren.

PETER B. KAUFFMAN.

In Fairview congregation, Appanoose county, Iowa, Oct. 1st, sister RODA J. HARDMAN. Her remains were consigned to its resting place on the 2nd of October, in the Brethren's grave-yard at their meeting-house. Aged 51 years 3 months, and 13 days. Disease paralysis and heart disease. She was confined to her bed for the most of her time for nearly 2 years. Shortly before her death, she called for the Elder of the church to anoint her. She fell asleep while sitting on the bed. Her funeral was preached by Elder Abraham Replogle and others, from St. John 24: 25.

The Christian Family Companion. Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

"Pure Religion."

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." James 1: 27.

Acts of mercy and kindness combined with personal purity of habits, appear to be the elements of this "pure religion." It is not the new birth or regeneration itself, but only the fruit or evidence that this mental change has taken place. It is from such visible signs alone, that we have to determine the character of persons. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Matth. 7: 16. It appears then that visiting is one of the most prominent fruits and also one of the evidences of the new birth. But it is conditional, depending solely on the manner in which visits are performed. Consequently the great, all-important, and indispensible question comes up: What is the proper conduct or manner to be shown in such visits? or what should be our deportment? We say it is to administer Christian sympathy and aid from the fact that the persons are afflicted in the loss of their relatives or in other calamities. "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting." Eccl. 7: 2. If one can feel it a pleasure to offer Christian sympathy to those in affliction, it is some evidence that the mind is feeding on "the bread which cometh down from heaven;" John 6: 50. It is not always that the afflicted will accept of Christian sympathy; yet it is the duty of all to be willing to offer it: "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not;" 2 Cor. 8: 12.

Again, the additional evidence of the new birth is, "to keep . . . unspotted from the world." This completes pure religion.

The next question is, What are worldly spots? for in order to shun them we should know what they are. We think they are sins, errors, and pollutions. But what does the word teach in regard to this point? "They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward . . . These are spots in your feasts of charity;" Jude 11: 12. If to have a spotted character was to go the way of Cain, it shows a very striking analogy to the position not only of the wicked world, but of the professed church itself; for as Cain slew his brother Abel, so the church can slay their brethren who chance to be arrayed in battle against them, in dispute of some political scheme. The political war churches of the present day cannot evade this point, if they attempt it; for they very well know they are giving encouragement, by their vote and influence, to a government that sometimes requires them to kill both their natural and their professed Christian brethren, as in the late rebellion. They reason in the same strain as the enemies of Christ did. Their government requires them to take up arms and kill their fellow-men, and therefore they think it ought to be done. Just as the enemies of Christ said, "We have a law, and by our law he ought to die;" John 19: 7. They only obeyed the laws of their government, in murdering Christ on the cross. They probably had no thought that they were committing murder. "They were only executing the laws and fulfilling their oath," as was said by an advocate of war government.—But it was no less murder when the laws required them to do it. The truth is, men had no right to put Christ to death, or any one else.—Nor had government a right to require it, because deliberate, human butchery can never be justified on Christian principles; and men have no right to act from any other principle.

To kill is "the way of Cain," not of Abel.—The way of Abel was the way of the righteous, the just. "Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you;" James 5: 6. God gave Abel no law or right of self-defence, as it is called, nor to any of his successors who would trust in him, but to his enemies who would not that he should reign over them, he allowed or gave them a king, in his anger, with all the evil concomitants, as the taking of life, slavery, and adultery, in the same sense that the young man we read of, was told to walk in all the vicious ways of his heart; "Rejoice, O young man! in thy youth," Eccl. 11: 9. But God alone was to be the defence of all those who would confide in him, and obey his word. "The Almighty shall be thy defence." Job, 22: 25.—In proof that the murderer should not be put to death, God placed a mark upon Cain, to show that he was not to be killed. And if any one became so malicious as to kill the murderer, God provided and gave the announcement that "vengeance shall be taken on him seven-fold." Gen. 4: 15. And who was to execute this vengeance but God himself? "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord;" Rom. 12; 19. "To me belongeth vengeance and recompense; their feet shall slide in due time; for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste;" Deut. 32: 34. From the fact that vengeance was to be taken seven-fold on the one who should kill the murderer, it is plainly inferred that the crime was seven times as great. Consequently the position of the great mass of the world, including almost all religious sects,is awful in the extreme; and very few, indeed, have the pure religion of the Bible. When God has said, "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him," 1 John 3: 15, how fearful indeed must be the character and doom of those who support a system of government by voluntary acts of approval, that require the murderer to be slain: a crime which the God of heaven has taught to be seven times worse than murder itself.

But the question may naturally arise, Why is it seven times worse? First, because God has emphatically forbidden it by placing on the murderer a mark; and second, because the private murderer, Cain, did not profess in truth to be a good man, therefore he was less guilty than those committing a similar deed with higher pretentions, or with more dispassionate deliberation. "And that servant which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes; Luke 12: 47. The case is like this. If, when a person is so far enlightened as to think it sinful to commit a private murder, but at the same time will take deliberate measures to have the private murderer slain, he becomes a criminal, meriting seven-fold more vengeance. Hence is seen the awful wicked position of the professed church: professing to be the disciples of Christ, when in reality, the leading majority are more truly the servants of Satan, deliberately doing his bidding in many things, but especially in giving or selling their vote and influence to uphold the horrid practice of butchering their fellow-men. Instead of visiting "the fatherless and widows in their affliction," their influence goes to support a system whose main business, in time of war, is to multiply the widows and fatherless by wholesale, in killing off the men.

We see by tracing out the results of what pure and undefiled religion is defined to be in the light of the gospel, that very few appear to posess it. Many confess Christ before men, but in works deny him. They are like those described by the Prophet: "A people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters: they have forsaken the Lord; they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward." "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats." "When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand to tread my courts? Bring no more vain oblations, incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me, I am weary to bear them."—"And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when we make many prayers, I will not hear; your hands are full of blood" Isa. 1: 4, 11,–15. "Your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquity; your lips have spoken lies." Chapter 59: 3. As we have already noticed some of the most glaring and criminal consequences flowing from a lack of pure religion, we will now see what are some of the benefits that may be expected to attend its possessor. First, he will have the approval of his Creator; which is infinitely of more worth than man's approval. He will also have the benefits of the reward and promise of "an hundred fold now in this time, and in the world to come, eternal life." Mark, 10: 30. Is not all this a bountiful gift? Just let the candid mind for a moment try to contemplate the magnitude of this amazing bounty, and it will be overwhelmed with astonishment; for it is totally incompetent to count or to make a full estimate of so vast a treasure. The satisfying and substantial enjoyments which accompany pure religion, even in the present life, being a hundred times greater than could possibly be enjoyed without it, is sufficient to secure its title to pre-eminence above everything else, if there were no hereafter. But the fact should always be borne in mind, that it must be the "Pure religion and undefiled before God;" not any of the various popular religions with which the churches are filled at the present day, comprising an endless catalogue of filthy polluting rubbish, called the "many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." 1 Tim. 6:9. Not only is the possessor of the pure religion endowed with incomputable and everlasting treasure himself, but his life is attended with untold benefits to others. His words and deeds of mercy to the afflicted are felt long after his example and Christian institutions may have induced many others to forsake the paths of vice and folly, to seek for themselves the same durable riches. And these also have extended to others still in succession the same inducements, who will have aided in producing the same happy results.

T. F. TUKESBURY.

A Question with only One Answer.

A young man from the provinces, who was sent to Paris to finish his education, had the misfortune of getting into bad company. He went so far as to wish and to say, "There is no God; God is only a word." After staying several years in the capital, the young man returned to his family. One day he was invited to a respectable house where there was a numerous company. While all were entertaining themselves with news, pleasures, and business, two girls, aged respectively twelve and thirteen, were seated in a bay-window reading together. The young man approached them, and asked:

"What beautiful romance are you reading so attentively, young ladies?"

"We are reading no romance, sir, we are reading the history of God's chosen people."

Astonished at such a question, the girls looked at each other, the blood mounting to their cheeks.

"And you, sir—do not you believe it?"

"Once I believed it, but after living in Paris, and studying philosophy, mathematics, and politics, I am convinced that God is an empty name."

"I, sir, was never in Paris; I have never studied philosophy or mathematics, or all those beautiful things which you know; I know only my catechism; but since you are so learned, and say there is no God, you can easily tell me whence the egg comes?"

"A funny question, truly; the egg comes from the hen."

"And now, sir, whence comes the hen?"

"You know that as well as I do, miss; the hen comes from the egg.'

'Which of them existed first, the egg or the hen?'

'I really do not know what you intend with this question and with your hen; but yet, that which existed first, was the hen.'

'There is a hen, then, which did not come from an egg?'

"Beg your pardon, miss, I did not take notice that the egg existed first.'

'There is, then, an egg which did not come from a hen?'

'Oh, if you—beg pardon—that is—you see—'

'I see, sir, that you do not know whether the egg existed before the hen or the hen before the egg.'

'Well, then, I say the hen.'

'Very well; there is, then, a hen which did not come from an egg. Tell me, now, who made this first hen, from which all other hens and eggs come?'

'With your hens and your eggs, it seems to me you take me for a poultry dealer.'

'By no means, sir; I only ask you to tell me whence the mother of all hens and eggs comes.'

'But for what object?'

'Well, since you do not know, you will permit me to tell you. He who created the first hen, or, as you would rather have it, the first egg, is the same who created the world; and this being we call God. You, who cannot explain the existence of a hen or an egg without God, still wish to maintain to be able to explain the existence of this world without a God.'

The young philosopher was silent; he quietly took his hat, and, full of shame, departed.—Translated from the French.

For the COMPANION.

Remarks on Romans 6th Chapter, 22d and 23rd Verses.

"But now being made free from sin, and become Servants of God, ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The substance, as contained in this scripture presented before you for your consideration, is of such a two-fold character, that it contains either the essential elements of condemnation, or the saving attributes necessary to insure our eternal happiness. For as being made free from righteousness is the character of the sinner, even so, being made free from sin is the finished character of the genuine devoted Christian; and in becoming servants to God, we are transferred from the service of one master to that of another, or, as more expressive of our situation, we are freed from the bondage of sin and engaged in the service of God. Having thus far advanced in the divine life, holiness of heart becomes the principle, and righteousness of life, the fruit; and the perfection of the fruit is to be endowed with all those christian virtues and graces named in the catalogue, that should cluster richly around the lives of those devoted to God's holy service; among which are these, which are characterized as the fruit of the Spirit; "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Against such there is no law." The law of sin and death attaches to none of these divine attributes; for they who possess them have been made free from this law, by implicit obedience to the divine will, being made partakers of the Holy Spirit, which is the ruling or governing power, exercising its vigilence over our souls, keeping us in continual subjection to God's holy, revealed will, that we may attain unto that righteousness and true holiness, essential to our final redemption. For the apostle gives us the comforting assurance, that "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the (children or) sons of God." This then is the gift or attribute of the divine life, which stands out in bold relief, in contradistinction to the spirit of the world. We are amply admonished to have the principles of Christ and go on to perfection, we are even so far reminded to be "perfect, even as our Father in heaven is perfect; although it is impossible to attain unto that perfection and true holiness in the same sense he enjoys it, because he is the very embodiment of all that is pure, holy, and good; yet we may enjoy it to the extent of our measure in its sinful nature, even as he enjoys it to the extent of his measure, with all the divine attributes clustering so profusely around it. We are glad to know that it is at least possible for us to attain to such a degree of perfection, to fit us for the blessed associations of heaven. This is the highest and holiest aspiration of a devoted christian, who, being made free from sin and becoming a servant to God, has this "fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life," the gift, "through Jesus Christ our Lord."

But "the wages of sin is death," not only in being embraced in the cold arms of physical and temporal death, and our bodies consigned to the dark, silent tomb. Were this the termination of our earthly and eternal existence, all we had to endure, we might rest secure, with no painful forebodings in reference to our final and eternal destiny. But this is not all. The death here prominently set forth, as the wages of sin, has direct reference to the second death —the eternal perdition in reservation for the ungodly—for all who know not God and have not obeyed the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Every sinner earns this by long, sore, and painful service. Oh, what pains do men take to get to hell! Early and late they toil at sin—slaves to the base appetites and passions of a fallen nature. Then would not divine justice be greatly in their debt did it not pay them, for a life-time spent in sin and iniquity, in direct violation of the decrees of high Heaven, calling down upon their defenseless heads the vengeance of an angry and offended God? We may, by a life prostituted to the service of the devil, merit hell; but never through any works or merit of our own, is it within our province to merit Heaven, as the merit attaching to this gift is alone through Christ our great mediator and Redeemer. The demands of divine Justice have been fully satisfied in the atonement; the offer of the forgiveness of sins, has been sealed with the precious blood of Christ; and the provision positively given, that, "if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

This brings prominently before our minds the question of vital importance to every lost and undone soul, as to what is implied by walking in the light. It is our solemn conviction, and we so emphatically respond, that to walk in the light, we must receive him as the life, the light, the truth, and the way, the door of the sheep-fold; and that, if we enter in by the means so divinely employed by him, keeping all the laws and ordinances of the Lord blameless, we shall most assuredly enjoy the divine approbation of walking in the light that casts its divine and penetrating rays of purity all around our associations in life, so that others seeing our good works, may catch up the inspiration of the divine character, and be induced to glorify God in the spirit of righteousness and true holiness.

But "the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." The apostle does not say, the wages of righteousness is eternal life, but that this eternal life, even to the righteous, is the gracious gift of God; and that even this gracious gift, comes "through Jesus Christ our Lord."—He alone hath procured it; and it is given to all those who find redemption in his blood. A sinner goes to hell, because he deservesit; a righteous man goes to heaven, because Christ has died for him, and has communicated that grace by which his sins are pardoned and his soul made holy. The word "wages," made use of in this scripture, has indirect reference to the wages of the Roman soldier; and it is used symbolically as the wages of the sinner, who has his daily pay, and this pay is, virtually death eternal. He has misery, because he is infected with the leprosy of sin; and this sin, to a greater or less extent, constitutes hell in his own bosom; because all is disorder and confusion where God does not reign, and every indulgence of sinful passion but increases this disorder, and consequently the misery of a sinner: "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." Death could not have entered the world had not sin entered first, hence it was sin, that not only introduced death, but has armed it with all its destroying force.

The goad or dagger of death is sin; and by this both body and soul is slain. "The strength of sin is the law;" because the law of God forbids all transgression, and sentences those who commit to temporal and eternal death. Had ye not known the law, ye had not known sin. "Where there is no law there is no transgression;" hence it is that sin has its controlling and binding power from the law which curses the transgressor.

If men were as much in earnest to have their souls saved as they are to prepare them for eternal perdition, heaven would be densely peopled, and devils would be their own companions. May God lay a live coal upon the altar of every unregenerate heart, and help you cherish up this thought. May it be kindled by the flames of undying love, until you become the happy victims of its regenerating influences. May he flash conviction into every lost and undone subject under the power of sin and Satan. May it dart from soul to soul, until the muddy waters of the great deep of sin and perdition are troubled to their most profound depths, that there shall be a mighty turning in with the overtures of mercy, and a multitude of precious souls be made free from this law of sin and eternal death, become servants of God, "having their fruit unto holiness, and the end eternal life."

We have endeavored to present before your minds the sad results of sin, and the wages you will receive for its commission, and the happy enjoyments of eternal bliss in reservation for all who have been made free from this law. Were I to use every effort in informing you of some rich, hidden treasure, and talk to you at great length in reference to its intrinsic value, and the glorious results in obtaining it; and did I not direct you in the way to find it, let me ask, of what avail would it be? This is unfortunately the sad dilemma in which we are too often placed in this enlightened age of the 19th century. It is this that constitutes much of the sophistry of preaching. The beauties and felicities of heaven are gotten up in elegant, imaginative array, until we are carried away, spell-bound, in vivid description; and when we are softly let down from this transcendant array of thought from imaginative heights, we relax into the unhappy conciousness of having received no instructions how to obtain it; hence the whole structure, the jewel of great price, is hidden from our view by the dark veil of obscurity. When we attempt to preach Jesus, he should be presented as the life, the truth, and the way, with the saving demands that will insure our entrance by him who is the door of the sheepfold; and any one who endeavors to climb up some other way than the way he has so divinely prescribed, the same is branded as a thief and a robber; robbing God of attributes and authority conferred upon him by virtue of his suffering and ignominious death—aye, by virtue of his obedience even unto the death of the cross. For he being made perfect through suffering has become "the author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation, which at first began to be spoken, by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" "Who hath believed our report, and to whom has the arm of the Lord been revealed." The strong arm of the Lord has been revealed through the prophets and apostles, he being the chief corner stone. Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid in Christ Jesus. The building fitly framed, and founded upon this rock, will grow up into a stately temple—a fit receptacle for the indwelling of the Holy Ghost; but in order to insure this, it must be founded on Jesus Christ the rock of our salvation a tried stone that must not be set at naught by the builders.

When the Lord gave directions for the building of the ark, he was not only Supreme Architect, but he wisely designated the kind of material to be used in its construction. As he told Noah, so he did. This was for the saving of Noah and his posterity, and his implicit obedience to the Divine will was Noah's safety. And we propose that, in the great plan of salvation, we have a parallel case, that must undergo the same test. He has propagated it, he is Supreme Architect of the plan, and imperative submission and obedience are the requisites to guarantee our eternal safety; so that, when we come to settle our final account, the debtor side of his book of remembrance, the wages of our sins, will all be canceled by an overwhelming credit of the good deeds in the body; standing discharged, free from the law of sin and eternal death, having a free title to that blissful and everlasting inheritance that fadeth not away in heaven forever.

Then, the profound question is, how are we to obtain it? Have you believed the report of the apostles and prophets? Has the strong arm of the Lord, in its saving attributes, been revealed to you? If not, the record of the wages of your sins is still growing longer and longer, whilst your credit page remains but a sad blank—the harvest past, the summer of your precious lives almost ended, and you are not saved.

Oh! what a distressing position, what an alarming prospective future, full of oblivion and dark despair! But thanks to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, you yet enjoy the exalted privilege of being made free from sin, and alive unto righteousness, by the exercise of the free will agency with which he has happily endowed you. Then will you submit to his divine authority, and be saved upon the express terms of the gospel? If so, we but reconfirm the report confirmed unto us by them that heard him: "And Jesus came and spake to them, saying, all power in heaven and in earth is given unto me. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." In this are contained the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, the saving report made accessable to us through the atonement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Will you bow in holy submission to His revealed will, and be saved? or will you reject it, and be eternally damned?

I feel I have not shunned, in my weakness, to declare unto you the counsel of God. I have preached unto you Jesus, with the saving demands made upon you—fully apprised you of the glorious realities of heaven and its eternal enjoyments—pointed the lost to the way of salvation, that they may obtain this jewel of great price. Will you, then, come and go with us, that we may do you good? Come now; hope deferred maketh the heart sick; procrastination is but the thief of time, lurking in the dark, benighted paths of dangerous delay. Angels in heaven have their harps attuned, ready to sing the glad anthems of rejoicing over one sinner that repenteth. The strong arm of the Lord is being made bare to receive you as members of his household, where you may have your fruit unto holiness, and in the end everlasting life. Then, "as ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God; for he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

"The message from the Lord receive ;
Ye all may come to Christ and live.
Oh ! let his love your hearts constrain,
Nor suffer him to die in vain."

Do you ask me when you are fit subjects for the holy institution of baptism? I answer you in the language of an old English Baptist, which I endorse: "These three things are necessary :

1. "To see and feel that you are a sinner, and need the remission of sins." See Acts 2 : 38.

2. "That you believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and rely on him as your only Savior." See Acts 8 : 37.

3. "That you feel willing to forsake all ungodliness, and devote your future life to the service and glory of your Redeemer; willing and not ashamed to put on Christ and follow him to the skies." See Rom. 6 : 4 ; Gal. 3 : 27.

If these things are found in you, and you are convinced of the will of God, delay not in doing it.

My dear, unconverted friends, it is not for you to say, what good can it do? You behold your Lord and Master entering the waters of Jordan, are you wiser and better than he? Beware that you reflect not on his wisdom; for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with him. Does the ordinance appear a cross to you, and, especially so, as it is something that does not fall in with the tastes and fancies of the world? Thank God for that; Christ never intended his ordinances to suit the fancies of unregenerated men.

And as to the cross, do you think it too heavy? Behold your Lord and Master passing through the baptism of his inconceivable suffering for you! Behold him carrying the cross upon which he was suspended for many hours, and thereon, by his dying groans and agonizing death, working out eternal redemption for you! Will you turn from these unparallelled scenes, and lend a deaf ear to the saving demands and efficacies resulting from all this, and exclaim, the cross of baptism is too heavy for you? Impossible, if you feel aright.

Then let me once more admonish you: Come, the great Physician of souls says, "Come." He is holding out the prescription that contains all the elements necessary to heal and cleanse you from the obnoxious infection of sinful leprosy, obliterating all of the record of the wages of your sins, placing you in the full possession of the pearl of great price—the gift of God, eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Christianity and Philosophy.

Any one acquainted with history knows that philosophy, since the days of Socrates, has been perfectly useless as a means of weeding vice out of the mind and heart.—The only way of arriving at a just estimate of the real worth of these two methods—philosophy and Christianity—for curing human nature of all its sin and woe, is to place the fruits of the two schemes side by side, and, from a comparison, make up our judgment. Greece, from the days of Socrates to the Christian era, will furnish an example of what pure philosophy, unaided by Christianity, can do. That philosophy is thus well described by Macaulay, in his essay on the life and works of Bacon :

"Assuredly, if the tree which Socrates planted and Plato watered is to be judged by its flowers and leaves, it is the noblest of trees. But if we take the homely test of Bacon, if we judge of the tree by its fruits, our opinion of it may perhaps be less favorable. When we sum up all the useful truths which we owe to that philosophy, to what do they amount? We find, indeed, abundant proofs that some of those who cultivated it were men of the first order of intellect. We find among their writings incomparable specimens both of dialectical and rhetorical art. We have no doubt that the ancient controversies were of use in so far as they served to exercise the faculties of the disputants, for there is no controversy so idle that it may not be of use in this way. But when we look for something more, we are forced to own ourselves disappointed. We are forced to say, with Bacon, that the celebrated philosophy ended in nothing but disputation ; that it was neither a vineyard nor an olive-ground, but an intricate wood of briers and thistles, from which those who lost themselves in it brought back many scratches and no food."

When Paul stood on Mars Hill, in the very home of this philosophy, surrounded by the followers of Plato and Aristotle, he might have said: "The greater part of five hundred years has passed away since Socrates taught in your streets, and Aristotle and Plato in the shady walks that surrounded the Lyceum : during these years a large proportion of the ablest men of every generation have been employed in constant efforts to bring to perfection the philosophy they taught. That philosophy has been magnificently patronized by the powerful; its professors have been held in the highest esteem by the public ; it has drawn to itself all the sap and vigor of the human intellect, and what has it effected? In what manner has it benefitted you ? Has it elevated and purified your minds and hearts? Has it erradiated superstition and idolatry? These questions might have puzzled the philosophers of the porch and garden.

Ask a follower of Christ what Christianity has done for the world, and his answer is ready : It has given to man the sublimest and most perfect views of God ; it has placed before him, in Jesus Christ, a perfect object for imitation ; it has ennobled man, and given him the truest and highest estimate of the soul's worth ; it has scattered the darkness that rests over the tomb, and enabled us to triumph over death and the grave ; it has converted thousands upon thousands from a life of sin to a life of holiness ; it has lifted the savage and cannibal from barbarism and slavery to cilivization and liberty ; it has purified literature, and given a literature to nations destitute of a written language. If you would know what Christianity has done for mankind, look abroad over the earth.—[A. S. Leonard in N. Y. Observer.

The Main Question.

Te main question for every Church to ask is : What are the results of our teachings and our labors in the characters of the men and women of our congregation and neighborhood ? How many are we reaching with our influence, and what are we doing for them ? Are the people to whom our gospel goes, enriched by it in their affections, enlightened by it in their understandings, restrained by it from wrong, urged by it to righteousness ? Is it proving itself the savor of life unto many ? Is the truth, as we have learned it, as we preach it, as we talk it, as we live it, the power of God unto the salvation of men from selfishness, from lust, from low cunning, from wrath and uncharitableness ? Are the men who sit in our pews, and pray in our prayer-meetings, and teach in our Sunday-schools, known every-where as true, brave, honest men ? Do they carry their religion into Broad Street? Does it keep them from cheating in trade ? Does it hold them back in these hot days of political strife, from misjudging and slandering their opponents, and from retailing the lies of the campaign on the stump or in the newspapers? Do they leave the Golden Rule in a guilt frame upon the parlor wall at home, or do they take it with them into the world as the measure of all their conduct? Are they surrounded with an atmosphere of cheerfulness, and does the spirit of Him who came to bring peace to earth and good-will to men shine from their faces and breathe like a sweet fragrance from their garments as they walk? What sort of a society is it which these Christians of ours, men and women, are building up? Is it a society in which simple tastes, generous aims, helpfulness, and beneficence abound? Do the mean deceits and the shallow frivolities of the times flourish or decline among them?

Men and brethren, this is the main question. There are many ways of putting it, but it means only this: What is the effect of this religion of ours upon the men and women to whom it is preached? By their lives the world judges our religion. If we are helping them to a better manhood or womanhood, we shall need no other arguments to prove its truth. If we are not, all the evidences of Christianity that have been written will make no impression on the minds of doubters.—Christian Union.

The Blind Eye Opened.

I have recently read of a young lady twenty-five years of age, who had been blind from birth. For twenty-five years she had lived in midnight darkness, groping through the gloom of an unbroken night. She could not have the faintest conception of those she loved, of rainbow hues, of the bloom of a Summer's morning, of the sublime loveliness of the expanded ocean, earth and sky. As her friends endeavored to picture to her the scenes, exhausting the powers of language, and illustration in the attempt, her soul struggled in sad and unavailing efforts to form some conception of the wonders which light could reveal.

A successful operation was performed, and sight was restored. For several days she was kept in a partially darkened chamber, until the visual organs gained strength, and she had become a little accustomed to their use. Then, on a lovely, pure morning, the window-blinds were thrown open, and she was allowed to look out, for the first time in her life, upon the wondrous workmanship of God's hand. Then was unfolded to her enraptured gaze the verdure of the carpeted earth, the luxuriance of its vegetation, the flowers, the towering trees waving their leaves in the gentle air, the wide-spread landscape extending apparently into infinity, and the grandeur of the ever-arching skies, with their gorgeous drapery of clouds.

She nearly fainted from excess of rapture. Tears of more than earthly delight gushed from those eyeballs which had so long been sightless. "O wonderful, wonderful!" she exclaimed; "heaven surely cannot surpass this. I never dreamed of aught so lovely. Upon such a scene I could gaze forever, forever, unwearied. No language can describe such grandeur and loveliness. O God! this must be thy dwelling-place, thine effulgent throne."

Thus in an ecstacy of bliss she gazed, exhausting the language of admiration, till her physician, fearing the effects of excitement so intense, closed the blinds.

And so shall it be with you, O happy, happy disciple of Jesus, when the film which earth and sin have incrusted shall be removed from your eyes, and, entering in at the golden gates, the splendors of the celestial paradise shall be opened to your view. Your eyes are now blinded. No description can give you an adequate idea of the glory and splendors of heaven. Christ will then open these splendors to your sight. And oh, what an entrancing view will then astonish and enrapture your soul! The celestial Eden, the paradise of God, the metropolis of the empire of the Almighty, around which the majestic orbs of a limitless universe revolve in adoration of the monarch there enthroned! Who can imagine the magnificence of such a scene? It will be as far superior to all your earthly conceptions as were the splendors of one of earth's most brilliant mornings to one whose sightless eyeballs had never witnessed but blackness and darkness and gloom. Then you shall see the Almighty Father as he is, hear his voice, and be entranced by his smile. Myriads of angel forms, in all the varied ranks of heaven's peerage, archangels, cherubim, seraphim, shall wing their flight before you, sweeping immensity with pinions which never tire, and flashing in heaven's brilliance plumage whose beauty never fades. The green pastures, the still waters, the towering hills of God, where myriads of celestials take glorious pastime, the golden city, the mansions upon whose architectural beauty, infinite wisdom and almighty power have lavished their resources,—these are the visions, so utterly inconceivable, which shall then burst upon your view, and where you shall spend your immortality, loving and beloved.

Child of sin and sorrow, uncheered by Christian hopes, can you reject the loving Savior who offers you all this without money and without price,—all this, if you will only return with a penitent heart to God, abandon sin, accept Jesus as your atoning Savior, seek the influences of the Spirit to to enable you to live a holy life, and thus allow our kind Heavenly Father to adopt you as his child and heir?

"There'll be no sorrow there; there'll be no sorrow there,
In heaven above where all is love."

Why Go West?

Skilled mechanics, laborers, as well as capitalists, will find DALE CITY the place for business. The town is laid out between two railroads, and the third is already graded; besides two more are expected, one from Hagerstown, Md., and another from Johnstown, Pa; the car & lomotive shops of the B. & W. R. R. may yet be built here, which alone would make Dale City the Altoona of Somerset county. The mineral resources, when fully developed, will enrich the county, and those who come now will have the best chance. The church of the Brethren is strong here, and extra inducements held out to those who are at least friendly. First of all a steam mill is wanted, and many other manufacturing establishments would prosper here; besides all kinds of mechanics and laborers are needed just now.

Forbearance is a domestic jewel, not to be worn for state or show, but for daily and unostentious ornament.

Opportunities are running to waste everywhere, like the golden fruit of the overburdened orchard. They are not confined to parallels of latitude. In running after them, we are perpetually running away from them.

I do not Like to Hear Him Pray.

We agree with the author of the following lines, and for this reason we have concluded to insert these verses into our paper once a year. They have already appeared several times in former volumes. Let every reader peruse them carefully.

I do not like to hear him pray.
Who loans at twenty-five percent.
For then I think the borrower may
Be pressed to pay for food and rent.
And in that book we all should heed,
Which says the lender should be blest:
As sure as I have eyes to read,
It does not say, "take interest."

I do not like to hear him pray
On bended knees about an hour,
For grace to spend, aright the day
Who knows his neighbor has no flour;
I'd rather see him go to mill
And buy the luckless brother bread,
And see his children eat their fill
And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray,
"Let blessings on the widow be!"
Who never seeks her home to say,
"If want o'ertakes you, come to me,"
I hate the prayer so loud and long,
That's offered for the orphan's weal,
By him who sees him crushed by wrong,
And only with the lips doth feel.

I do not like to hear her pray,
With jewelled ear and silken dress,
Whose washer-woman toils all day,
And then is asked to "work for less."
Such pious shavers I despise:
With folded hands and airs demure,
They lift to heaven their "angel eyes,"
Then steal the earnings of the poor!

I do not like such soulless prayers;
If wrong I hope to be forgiven:
No angel's wing them upward bears—
They're lost a million miles from heaven.
I do not like long prayers to hear,
And studied from the lips depart;
Our Father lends a ready ear,
Let words be few, He hears the heart.

The Fruit of Gethsemane.

Can you think what it is? As you sit at your well spread table, and the dish of Olives is handed you, has your mind ever wandered from the green oval drupes to the garden out of Jerusalem, over the little Brook Kedron, at the foot of the Mount of Olives? There, within that sacred inclosure, stand eight ancient trees, preserved and cared for by the monks of the monastery to which the garden now belongs. Some say these are the very trees that saw the Savior's agony for us. It may be.

The olive lives to a great age—hundreds on hundreds of years. It is evergreen, with lanced-shaped leaves, silvery-white on the under side. It grows very slowly, and seldom attains to more than the height of twenty feet, except in a warm climate.

The little white flowers are in branching racemes—that is, they have separate stalks—and are in long clusters, as currants grow. You know what the fruit is when it is brought to you preserved in salt and water. This is picked in its unripe state. When matured, it is of a dark purple, but it is almost too pungent to be eaten without some preparation The pickled fruit and the oil are in demand the world over.

The, oil is pressed from the pulp instead of from the stone or pip. It was used for the most sacred purposes in olden times—for the anointing of God's priests, for the holy lamps, and for meat offerings before the Lord. There was a press at the foot of the Mount of Olives, in the garden where our Savior was betrayed. "Oil press" is what Gethsemane means. The trees bear only every alternate year, and then the fruit is picked carefully, reduced to a pulp, put into sacks of course linen or feather grass, and pressed in order to get the oil for our salad.

From the south of France we get the best importation; and we use it in food, in medicine, and in manufactures. In Syria, the Holy Land, in Greece and in Africa the olive has its native home; and it has been carried to France and Italy and Spain, and to East Florida, in the United States; but it does not flourish well in our country. There is a species of American olive that is found sometimes on the coast of Florida, and along the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. It is a large shrub, or small tree, and has a globe-like, purple fruit, about as big as a gooseberry.

I think you will remember that the olive branch is the emblem of peace, since the dove brought it to Noah in the ark when the waters of the deluge had subsided, and God's righteous anger against the wicked was appeased. The ancients used to crown their victors with olive-wreaths when the battle was over and they had come home triumphant. The athletes who were to take part in the games prepared their bodies with olive oil.

Olive wood was used for the doors and posts in Solomon's temple, and for the two cherubim within the holy of holies; but that was the wild olive, that bore not fruit of itself. It must be grafted into a good tree. See the beautiful significance of bringing it into the temple of God!

Shall we think of the precious olive as the fruit of Gethsemane? And shall we forget Him who in the sacred garden was bruised for our transgressions, and in his agony sweat, as it were, great drops of blood beneath the ancient trees?—Christian Banner.

The Blessings of To-day.

Strange, we never prize the music
Till the sweet-voiced birds have flown
Strange, that we should slight the violets
Till the lovely flowers are gone:
Strange, that summer skies and sunshine
Never seem one-half so fair
As when winter's snowy pinions
Shake the white down in the air.

Lips from which the seal of silence
None but God can roll away,
Never blossomed in such beauty
As adorn the mouth to-day.
And sweet words that freight our mem'ry
With their beautiful perfume,
Come to us in sweeter accents
Through the portals of the tomb.

Let us gather up the sunbeams
Lying all around our path:
Let us keep the wheat and roses,
Casting out the thorns and chaff;
Let us find our sweetest comfort
In the blessings of the day,
With a patient hand removing
All the briars from our way.

The gates of heaven are low arched; we must enter upon our knees.

Forgiveness: a kiss of the lips to heal a stab at the heart.

Aim high; but not so high as not to be able to hit anything.

Pious Youth Department.

One Thing Needful.

Is this so? Is this true, that there is one thing needful? If so, then what is it?

We may well ask what is it, for who would not like to be in possession of this one thing? Can it be riches? Can it be pleasure? Can it be honor? Can it be happiness? Can it be health? No; none of these. Then what may it be? Surely, what can it be but the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost; or, in other words, the knowledge of sins forgiven?

What can be more needful than this—to have our peace made with God, and have fellowship with His Son, Jesus Christ? Who can save from sin, or do what Jesus can?

Can a belief in any of the isms of the present day save us or avail us anything, when we are obliged to leave this world and go down into the silent grave? Will earthly riches and honors do us any good then? Ah, no; they will be of no avail at such a time; but if we have chosen Jesus for our friend, then He will stand by us, for the Word says, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Precious promise! Then, again, when we stand in the judgment, who will be our substitute if we have not made Jesus our friend? Who, or what else can we find to shelter us from the wrath of God, that will fall on all, unless a substitute is found?

Reader, I ask you to seek until you find the "pearl of great price." Don't rest until you know your sins forgiven.— People's Journal.

Vicissitudes of Life.

Remember that human life is but as the journey of a day. We rise in the morning of youth, full of vigor and expectation. Set forward with spirit and hope, with gayety and with diligence, and travel on awhile in the straight road of piety towards the mansion of rest. In a short time we remit our ferver, and endeavor to find some mitigation of our duty and some more easy means of obtaining the same end. We then relax our vigor and resolve to be no more terrified with crimes at a distance, but rely upon our own constancy and venture to approach what we resolve never to touch. We thus enter the bowers of ease and repose in the shades of security. Here the heart softens and vigilance subsides; we are then willing to inquire whether we may not at least turn our eyes upon the gardens of pleasure. We approach them with scruples and hesitation; we enter them timorous and trembling, and always hope to pass through them without losing the road of virtue which, for awhile, we keep in our sight and to which we propose to return. But temptation succeeds temptation and one compliance prepares us for another. We, in time, lose the happiness of innocence and solace our disquiet with sensual gratifications. By degrees, we let fall the remembrance of our original intention and quit the only adequate object of rational desire. We entangle ourselves in business, immerge ourselves in luxury, and rove through the labyrinth of inconstancy, till the darkness of old age begins to invade us and disease and anxiety obstruct our way. We then look back upon our lives with horror—with sorrow, with repentance, and wish that we had not forsaken the ways of virtue.

Happy are they, my friend, who learn not to despair but shall remember that, though the day is past and their strength is wasted, there yet remains one effort to be made, that reformation is never hopeless nor sincere endeavor ever unassisted; that the wanderer may at length return, after all his errors, and that he who implores strength and courage from above shall find danger and difficulty give way before him.

Going to Jesus.

Nearly three years ago, a noble steamer was sinking with hundreds of persons on board. Only one boat load was saved. As a man was leaping into a tossing boat, a girl who could not be taken into the boat, and who knew that she would soon be swallowed up in the deep sea, handed him a note, saying:

"Give this to my mother!"

The man was saved. The girl, with hundreds of other persons, was drowned. The mother had the note. What do you think the little girl had written in it? Here are her words:

"Dear mother, you must not grieve for me. I am going to Jesus."

Dear girls! What faith and courage she must have had to write that note! She was going to Jesus through the stormy waves of the angry sea, yet she was not afraid. That's the kind of faith you need, my reader. Well, Jesus will give it you if you ask him, for he says, "Come unto me. I will give you rest."

It makes dying easy to know that we are going to the bright home which Jesus has gone to make ever beautiful. Let us get ready for that bright home by loving Jesus.

Obedience to Parents.

"Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord." Col. 3:20.

Children, have you ever thought that you grieve your parents when you disobey them? Yes, you do, but it does not stop here; you also grieve your heavenly Parent, God, who gives you all things, and who also punishes us for our disobedience, and whose judgment is true.

I wish to refer you to the case of Joseph and his brethren, how he dreamed dreams and told them to his brethren; and they hated him because of his father's loving him, and because of his dreams, knowing that they should come under him. When there was opportunity, they sought to slay him; but Reuben said, "Shed not blood," so they cast him into the pit. But when they saw the Ishmaelites come, they sold him, and he went to Egypt. And they took the coat of many colors which his father had given him, and dipped it in the blood of a kid, to deceive their father. Now children, take warning from this. They grieved their father and God, for when we go on in this history, you find the just punishment that God brought about because of their wicked acts. Now Pharoah dreams a dream. Joseph, though being despised of his brethren, God now blesses, giving him knowledge to interpret the dream. The interpretation was, seven years of plenty and seven of scarcity. This brought Joseph's brethren into Egypt; and here, in course of time, their punishment came for the evil they had done, by being overtasked with work. Children, though you cannot see the benefit of obeying now, when you grow to be men and women, if under godfearing parents, your character will be so that you will be expected to be useful in society, which will be well pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

We would forget that there was any such thing as suffering in the world, were we not occasionally reminded of it through our own.

Editor's Diary.

The absence of our usual columns of personalities during the past several weeks, will, no doubt, have been observed and remarked upon–favorably or otherwise. By some undoubtedly favorably, if there is such a thing as pleasing such persons at all. One brother had the kindness—we suppose he would call it that—to tell us that such stuff was not worth the paper upon which it was printed, let alone the money which we (he) paid for it. If it was kindness, it was of the aggravated kind; not having published his manuscript quite as soon as he had expected it, although it was inserted before we had received his letter. Of course it is all right. He is an old bishop, and has a right to say what he pleases to a young man.

But that was not the only excuse for the absence of our diary. We had so much to do that we could keep no account of what we did; for, as soon as one job was completed, we had to lay hold of another. Perhaps some of our readers are curious to know what we work at, thinking that an editor has nothing to do but to write and read. Well, briefly, we have fitted up a Book Store, for which purpose we were obliged to spend several days in Pittsburg, selecting our stock, &c. Then we received our new stereotyping machine, and were required to fix it up; and a hundred other little things occupied our time. We can get proof that we were not idle.

Since our last, we have had ministerial visits by brethren James A. Sell, of Newry, Pa., and Jacob Koons of Pattonsville, Pa. Brother Koons is a new beginner, and does not venture out very far. We see no use, however, in quite so much timidity. Brother Sell is more venturesome, but knows his bounds about as well as any other man. He preached to to us at two meetings to the acceptance of the congregation, and to the edification of all who will heed his kindly words. He was a member of the Companion family for over a year, and it awakened pleasant reminiscences to have him visit our house and sanctum again. On Wednesday morning, 4th instant, the brethren at Berlin received them, and conveyed them to that congregation, where they will remain and preach a few days. The Lord be with them.

Patience.

So many and so various are the evils and temptations incident to human nature, and so frequently are our greatest earthly comforts dashed to the ground by some unlucky turn of fortune's wheel, that no state of life, whether of youth or age, of riches or poverty, of greatness or meanness, is exempt from difficulties and troubles that will cause us to become unhappy, if not altogether discontented. Patience is a great help at such times. If what we suffer has been brought on us by some disreputable act of ours, patience, should be our first thought, since no one ought to become angry at feeling that which he has deserved. If we are conscious that we have not contributed to our own sufferings, patience, whether more necessary or not, is much easier, since our pain is then without aggravations, and we care not to add to our own misfortunes.

If our heavenly Father has seen fit to deprive us of any of those blessings which seem necessary to make us happy, it should be our duty to resign them with submission, and not murmer.

Any person who can control his daily passions, and give up the fondest wishes of his soul; who keeps a constant guard of his thoughts, words, and actions, and takes up his cross to follow the meek and lowly Jesus, is influenced by a strong sense of duty, and feels that he is bound even to obey the severest precepts of the gospel.

Patience is given, as a gift, to every person, but all do not cultivate it alike: some even permit it to become entirely extinct; they can therefore not bear patiently the least misfortune that may have been brought upon them, and, as a consequence, become sullen and abusive to every one about them. Such a person is not Christ-like and is certainly not what is required of a Christain.

God never brings any misfortune upon us, but what is meant for our good. We need chastisement, sometimes, in order to remind us of our duty, Since, then, an entire and unmixed happiness is not to be hoped for in our present state, let us not be too earnest in our wishes to find it here, but place our happiness on things above, and on that state which approaches nearest to it, which is, doing our duty in whatever station God has been pleased to place us.

"To hope for perfect happiness is vain;
Even joy has ever its alloys of pain."

Brethren's Almanac.

Thousands have been sold, and hundren's more can be supplied. Only seventy-five cents a dozen, or 10 cents a single copy.

The Brethren's Almanac, with a list of the addresses of ministers, is original with the proprietor of the COMPANION. It is copyrighted, and to steal our list of names is an offense against the law. Parties who announced their purpose to publish such a list, were notified of this fact; upon which they promised they would not use our list, though they had intended to do so. Circumstantial evidence, is, however, very strongly against them. What was true last year, however, is not true this year; and in nothing is this fact more applicable than in almanac making. Better have the genuine article, especially when it is cheaper than the imitation.

The Nazarene.

Where is it spoken, "He shall be called a Nazarene?" Matt. 2:23.

A. J. SWITZER.

REMARKS.

In Judges 13:5, it is said, "Thou shalt conceive and bear a son, and no razor shall come on his head: for the child shall be a Nazarite before God from the womb: and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines." This is the nearest approach to the sentence, "He shall be called a Nazarene," that is to be found in the Old Testament prophecies. It is true this prediction had direct reference to Samson; but Samson may be regarded as a type of Christ, and as such, whatever was predicted of him was predicted of Christ in a higher sense. The saying referred to in the 18th verse is of the same nature, which confirms us in the correctness of the foregoing opinion. J. W. B.

Our Rule.

Our readers will please remember our invariable rule: That our paper is sent only to those who order it.—Once a subscriber is not always a subscriber, unless it is so ordered at the time. So you will not neglect to renew your subscription with the hope that the paper will come on without being ordered. We like to hear from all our patrons at least once a year, and there is no more fitting time than at New Year, or shortly before. Besides, we want all willing patrons, who are satisfied with their bargain, and this plan gives us a good opportunity to learn how our patrons are satisfied with our paper. Short settlements make long friendships. If you do not think worth while to renew your subscription, we take it for granted that the paper would not be very acceptable if sent without an order. Besides, our rates are cash in advance, and how could we get the cash in advance if you did not send it before we send the paper. Hence our rule.

One More.

One more number, and volume eight will be closed. We hope those of our patrons who have not yet done so, will immediately, upon the reception of this number, forward their subscription, that we may receive it before the new volume begins. Not only his or her own subscription, but we invite every one to endeavor to secure one additional name.

Tune and Hymn Book.

It gives general satisfaction. We have already sent out over 600; and there are hundreds more ordered. The books are sent out as soon as they are received from the binders. "First come, first served," is our motto; and to serve all as soon as possible, our aim. Send in your orders.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE.—S. S. Wood & Co., Publishers, Newburg, N. Y. Terms: One dollar per year. It contains some very wholesome reading matter; but mixes in a little too much fiction, to be recommended by us. The publishers offer great inducements to agents.

PREMIUM.—If we were to charge a dollar and a half for a dollar and a quarter paper, we could afford to give a six cent premium. It will not require much explanation to your people to have them see through that part of the business. If our patrons will agree to pay us $1.75 for an extra quality of paper, to be used in the COMPANION, we will furnish each subscriber with a copy of the Brethren's Almanac free, and make a handsome profit by the transaction.

LEWIS KIMMEL. The brother had ordered almanacs but had not paid for them.

TOBIAS F. IMLER:— Sell it if you can; if not, return it.

JOSHUA BERKEY:— We cannot account for it. We will send your paper to vol. 9, No. 12.

JACOB CONNER:— The address of brother Daniel Hollinger is Dickinson Cumberland county, Pa., we think.

DANIEL HAYS:— All right. We have entered your name for vol. 9.

DANIEL K. KLINE: Numbers 22 and 23 are exhausted. Try your neighbors who do not file their papers.

Response to Brother John Forney, Sen.

Dear Brother:—As you desire an explanation with regard to an idea I incidentally dropped, or advanced, in my article written on the resurrection, I will try and give it. After quoting my language where I said, "The light of nature is sufficient to tell us that the soul is immortal," you ask the question, "Are we to understand that the light of nature was all the light we needed?" I will answer, no. Then you ask, "Is that the reason the Bible does not teach it?" I would answer, the Bible does teach it. The idea I intended to convey is, the heathen, who is destitute of the Bible, and has no knowledge of Divine revelation, is a religious being, and possessed of a human mind, and endowed with reason, and has, by these God-given powers, or faculties, discovered to a certain degree, that man is a being that will live and have an existence beyond the grave. This doctrine was proclaimed by Plato and Socrates, heathen philosophers, having no knowledge of Bible revelation, and it was received with reverence. And when Jesus Christ came into the world, the already acknowledged doctrine was confirmed, who brought "life and immortality to light through the Gospel."

Now we cannot see that this idea does in any way clash with scripture passages you referred me to. But, dear brother, from the second question you ask, and referring me to the scripture you did, it would seem to me as though you doubted the immortality, or future existence of the soul. May be I do not rightly apprehend your idea. Would be pleased to have an explanation, not that we love controversy. Under no circumstances do I engage in controversy, unless it be apparent that the truth suffers from not engaging in it. If that be your position perhaps I may have something more to say on the subject. What I have written I have written in love.

From your unworthy young brother,

M. J. Thomas.

Missionary Correspondence.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—We are still on our mission field, and preach wherever a door is open unto us. Nothing of special note occured since our last report, except that Eld. Carr met us on Thursday, with a view of having a talk on the point of difference that sprang up between us a few evenings previous; but not being able (or willing) to see alike, we were obliged to agree to disagree, and so we parted. We had meeting every night, excepting Saturday. Yesterday, (Sunday) we met at the Wharf Meethouse, where Eld. Bisbee, (Methodist Minister,) had appointments forenoon and afternoon. He very politely and courteously offered us his place, which we accepted, and had a pleasant day's exercises. In the evening we attended their prayer meeting at the same place, which was reasonably well attended, and was conducted rather as a social or experience meeting; viz: singing, reading the word, exhortation to constancy, holiness, and a striving for sanctification; followed by telling their experience, their hopes, their desires, and their determinations. We parted with the minister and congregation on quite friendly terms. Last night we again lodged with friend Owen Withee, son of Elder Withee, dec'd about two years. His widow is still living with her son, a very intelligent old lady, and very strict and sincere in what she conceives to be her duty. Part of this report was written with them, and part at friend Alfred Moore's, with whom we visited and dined. For the present we say farewell. Pray for us.

Daniel Longanecker.

Skowhegan, Me., Nov. 25th, 1872.

Seward County Nebraska.

Nov. 15th, 1872.

Brother Henry:—I thought I would write you a few lines for the C. F. C., for the benefit of some. As for church news, I am sorry to say we have none in this county. There are some few scattering Brethren here, but no meetings. I have been in this county over two years, and have not had the privilege of meeting with the Brethren since I came to Nebraska.

We have a good country—good soil for wheat, corn, oats, and all vegetables. Wheat this season averaged 25 bushels to the acre. Corn was not as good as last year, on account of the dry weather this fall.

Seward county joins Lancaster county on the west, being the first county west of the Capital of Nebraska.

Timber, generally, is scarce: but in a few years we will have plenty, as nearly all the farmers are setting out groves every spring, consisting of soft maple, cotton-wood, walnut, &c. At present most of us burn corn for fuel, as it is abundant, and about as cheap as wood, being 15 to 20 cents per bushel.

The homesteads in this county are all taken up; but some will sell reasonable. Railroad lands can be had on ten years' time, at 6 per cent. interest, or cheap for cash, at from $4 to $20 dollars an acre.

This country is fast settling up from all parts of the United States and the old world. Brethren, here it don't cost much to open a farm, like other countries. We have no fences to make, and no stumps or stones to bother with. We break our land and plant corn on it, and some seasons raise a pretty good crop; and the next season we sow wheat on it, and harrow in well, and some seasons reap 25 bushels to the acre. Now, brethren, if any of you are getting tired of living amongst the hils, stumps and rocks of Pennsylvania, or other Eastern States, I think you cannot find a better country than this for farming, and a healthier country cannot be found. I am from Pennsylvania. I know what it is to farm there, among the hills, stumps, and rocks. Now, I would like if some of the Brethren would settle in this county, as every spring there are some moving west; especially some of the ministering brethren of the true faith, as I think much good might be done here. I long to see the time when we shall have an organized church in this county. There are some here who would join the church if they had a chance. If any of the Brethren wish to know more of this country, they can learn by addressing the undersigned,

D. P. Keefer.
Ulysses, Butler Co., Neb.

Funkstown, Md., Nov. 25, 1872.

Brother Holsinger:—I imagine that you, and some of the other brethren, sometimes feel like Paul did when he said to Barnabas, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." It is now nearly two years since you and brother Myers visited the Beaver Creek church, and preached to them "the word of the Lord." Do you, by this time, wonder how they do? Should you and brother Myers contemplate making us a visit, to see for yourselves; I think I could promise you a warm welcome from the brethren. In the meantime, perhaps, a letter would be acceptable.

Don't you think that little quarrel between Paul and Barnabas, about who they should take with them, is encouraging to disciples of the present day? I do not mean that it encourages quarreling; but I think we need not utterly despair, when overcome through weakness, if such good men as they contended till they parted asunder. Why, Peter's denying his Lord, and cursing and swearing about it, is a comfort! Not that we are glad he did so; but we are glad it was put on record, that we can thereby know that such a great sin as that was freely forgiven; and that he could, after such a fall, attain to such heights of spirituality and usefulness. And then, again. Peter's dissimulation before his Jewish brethren shows that, even in his better days, he was not perfect—that the "old man" abode with him still, as he does with us. Doubtless these weaknesses and falls of the Apostles were recorded for our profit, that we might take warning and walk circumspectly, and if we fall through weakness, remembering them, we might have courage to rise and press forward as they did.

But I intended to tell you something about the welfare of the Beaver Creek congregation. Please excuse the digression. If I could unfold to you the workings of each soul in the Beaver Creek congregation, the manifold temptations and deliverances, the seasons of joy, the longings and aspirations, the seasons of despondency, what a volume it would make! But my report will have to be more general and superficial. I know some have been "passing under the rod;" some have gone home; others have felt their tabernacle of clay tottering as though it were about to dissolve, and have called for the Elders of the church and been anointed with oil. Some—at least one—have had times of deep despondency, when the soul cried out, "Forsake me not utterly. Oh, Lord, hide not thy face from me." But through all God has been "a very present help in trouble." This much I know, but can go no deeper.

There has been quite a number of accessions to the church the latter part of the summer and this fall. Between twenty and thirty have been baptized. Every few Sundays there are applicants for baptism. Some from other churches, becoming dissatisfied with their faith and practice, have asked for admission, and have been initiated by baptism into the Master's fold. There seems to be quite an awakening in the neighborhood of Fahrney's meeting-house, where you preached so often while here. Some of our deacons have moved away, and others, beginning to feel the weight of three score years and ten, find their duties to be more burdensome than formerly. The brethren purpose to give them some assistance by electing two more deacons.

One of our Elders, Joseph Wolf, has been a great sufferer; and since autumn has set in, he is seldom able to attend meeting. I am sure he would be glad if the brethren would remember him at the mercy-seat. The brethren intend holding a series of meetings at the Long Meadow meeting-house, to commence next Sunday, providing they can get ministerial help.

On account of the horse plague, our meeting at Funkstown, yesterday, was quite small. But the small congregation seemed to be no hindrance to brother Stouffer. He preached to the great edification of at least one. How thankful we ought to be that this dreadful disease is not more fatal. I suppose we can hardly conceive what a great calamity it would have been if all the horses that were sick had died. It has sadly interrupted our mail facilities.

Accept my well wishes for COMPANION volume nine. May she be better and more prosperous than either of her eight older sisters.

Yours, very sincerely.

E. WILLIAMS.

To Brother John Wise.

GREETING:—There is a young man now traveling about amongst the Brethren in Wayne county, Ohio, calling himself L. E. Smith. He claims to be a brother. He came to my house Saturday evening, the 16th of November, and introduced himself as brother Lewis E. Smith, from Washington county, Pa. He is rather a slim, tall man, not at all separated from the world by way of uniform. I asked him whether he had any acquaintance with brother John Wise. "Yes," he said, "I have seen him a few times, and also heard him speak." Then I asked him as to what arm of the church he held his membership in. Well, he had forgotten the name of the church; but finally he thought it was Knox church. I then asked him as to who was their house-keeper; also names of speakers and deacons. "Well," he said, "we have no house-keeper, but we have one speaker." But he had forgotten his name. Finally, he said, "His name is Franklin Ester." "Well, now, for the deacons' names." He had forgotten again; but, after a while he thought, "The one's name is—is—is—is—Joseph—Joseph—Joseph—something." He could not tell. Now for the others: "Well, the one's name is Amos and the other's name is Harman." This is all he could tell about them. He further said that they were a small congregation cut off from J. Wise's. I asked the name of Wise's congregation, but he could not tell. He says that he belongs to the church seven years already, but he can't give us much satisfaction about himself; so we thought that we would appeal to you for farther information, since he claims that he had formerly belonged to your congregation. Now, brother John, if you can give us some satisfaction about this man, do so; if not we shall set him down as an impostor. We want you to answer through the COMPANION, for the satisfaction of the brotherhood.

This leaves us all well, hoping it may find you enjoying the same great blessing.

Yours, fraternally.

J. B. SHOEMAKER.

From Armstrong County, Pa. November 21st, 1872.

Brother Holsinger:—Our meeting as announced is closed. Brother P. J. Brown, of Congress, Ohio, arrived on the 8th inst; but owing to sickness in brother J. Nicholson's family, his son Charles lying low of typhoid fever, he failed to come; and the time was then past in which we could find more help. We hope the good Lord has restored his family to their wonted health, ere this time. During our meeting we heard of the illness of his companion. She was recovering at last accounts. Brother Brown was the only one to labor; and he labored faithfully while with us. He tried to preach Jesus crucified for sinners as a complete Savior to all who come to God by him, and continue faithful in his service. He taught us that it was very important for us to "fall on this stone," and to be broken, lest it after a while fall on us, and we be ground to "powder." We hope that this discourse will long be felt and practiced by the body of believers here. But I need not refer you to this one effort of our brother; for he labored well all the while; but this seemed to be so very timely, and was appreciated, as were his other labors, though the church did not reap an increase as we have at other times. But we trust it is as "bread cast on the waters" of which we may gather many days hence.

FRIDAY 15th. The time for the love-feast meeting at Glade Run, this county, which I was obliged to attend, as other help failed the brethren there, and as our brethren here did not consent to close our meeting yet. Accordingly self and son found our way over the Allegheny River, and found the brethren looking for help. Meeting Friday evening, Saturday forenoon and afternoon, and in the evening, we tried to attend to "the ordinances of the Lord's house." There was the best of order, and much interest on the part of the spectators. This was somewhat gratifying to our brethren here, as you no doubt remember this is the place where the floor gave way at the last communion occasion and caused "quite a panic" among the people. A few still were fearful, but the repairs proved quite sufficient for the safety and comfort of a large concourse of people. Meeting twice on Lord's day which closed this meeting.

Labor here is much needed. The harvest is great, and seems ripe to reap; but the laborers are few. Brethren and sisters, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his harvest." Why should souls here perish for want of the water of life? Is there no vessel to bear it to them?

Returned to our home on Monday, 18th, in time for our last meeting here. Text, 2 Cor. 13: 11. Now we thought best to close, as many of us found it difficult to get to meeting on foot, for there were no horses here this evening, all being tied up in shelter at home, in hopes of doing service some other day. We trust that much and lasting good will result from this effort. Brother Brown was conveyed to brother Jacob Beer's to remain two days, and then to pass on to Red Bank. We fondly hope and pray that the Lord will be near to give success to "the word."

LEWIS KIMMEL.

Missionary Correspondence.

Dear brethren and sisters: Our last report was written on the 25th. That afternoon we visited friends Alfred Moore and Samuel Barnes. At the latter place the mother of the family has been sorely afflicted, for upwards of six years, with internal cancer. She is however cheerful under her affliction, and we enjoyed a pleasant visit. Meeting in the evening at Elder Dennis's; good attendance, and very good attention to the word preached.

26th. Rather cold this morning, with some snow. Visited to-day friends Amos Rowe and Alvin Strickland; both of Advent persuasion. They treated us with the utmost kindness and respect. Meeting at the school-house in the evening; rather slim attendance. Lodged with friend James Gilmore? well cared for. During last night a few inches of snow fell.

27th. Visited friends J. Fredric and Elder Dennis. Meeting in the evening at friend Amos Adams's. Very interesting meeting, good attention and order.

28th. Thanksgiving day. Met at Wharf meeting-house, and enjoyed a pleasant time. Dinner with friend Cyrus Wellington. Meeting in the evening at friend Ebenezer Clark's, father of Elder Wm. H. Clark, who was also present at the meeting, and bore an honorable testimony of the word preached. Here we had a crowded house, and very good attention, and a good interest manifested by the people. We had quite a pleasant time with the family, especially the young Baptist minister.

29th. Wind rose in the night, with some snow, which increased all day, so by evening the weather was quite on the winter order, so that no hearers came out to meeting, which was to be at friend S. Burns's, with the invalid mother. However we had a pleasant season of worship with the family; singing, prayer reading, exhortation, and friendly conversation.

30th. About 5 inches of snow this morning, and quite cold, with considerable wind, but sun-shine all day. Considerable drift.

Farewell for the present. Pray for us.

D. M. HOLSINGER.
D. LONGANECKER.

MARRIED.

November 24th, at the residence of Daniel Hauger by Valentine Blough, Mr. LEVI J. JODER and sister ELIZA HOSTETLER, both of Dale City Pa.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with Obituary Notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the South Bend branch, St. Joseph county, Ind., Nov. 14th, sister CELIA ANN WHITMORE, wife of brother David Whitmore, aged 36 years, less two days. Disease, typhoid sore throat.

Funeral services by the writer.

She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss, which to her is gain. On the 16th her remains were followed to their last resting place by a large circle of friends. Thus an affectionate wife, a kind mother, a consistent and praise-worthy member has gone to her rest. C. WENGER.

In the Naperville congregation, Dupage county, Ill, March 29th, sister CATHARINE MILEY, wife of John Miley, dec'd., aged about 61 years.

Funeral services by the brethren.

Also, in the same congregation, May 23d, brother SAMUEL FRY, aged 50 years, 10 months, and 15 days.

Funeral services by the brethren.

Also, in the same congregation, Nov. 19th, brother DAVID SOLLENBERGER, aged 76 years, 7 months, and 10 days.

He came to his death by being caught by a locomotive. He was in Iowa on a visit with his sons, and was on his way home. He landed at Naperville; then then started west on the railroad track, and the westward train, at 7 o'clock in the evening, caught him, threw him into the ditch, killing him instantly. His left leg was nearly cut off above the ankle, and a large gash cut in his head, and his skull broken. It is supposed that he was bewildered, as he had walked past the road leading to his son Michael's, where he had his home. He was about one-fourth of a mile from the depot when it happened.

Funeral services by the brethren, from Mark 13: 33: "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." JOHN HOLLINGER.

Brother SOLOMON S. HORNER was born Sept. 17th. 1801, and formerly lived near Stanton's Mills, Somerset Co., Pa., and lately at Elderton, Armstrong Co., Pa., died Oct. 10th, 1872, aged 71 years and 23 days.

He enjoyed a religious life while living here with us, (in the Plum Creek branch of the church,) and we hope he died the death of the righteous, being reconciled to the will of the Lord.

Funeral services by P. J. Brown, from Ohio, who was holding a series of meetings for us at the time, from the words, "There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God;" Heb. 4: 9, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends and relatives. JACOB KELSO.

In the Union City congregation, Ind., brother ISAAC ARNOLD, November 5th, aged 72 years, 2 mos., and 16 days. Disease not known.

Funeral services by brother Wm. K. Simmons and the writer.

THOMAS B. WENRICK.

In the Buffalo Valley branch, Union county Pa., October 4, sister MARY MILLER, wife of Peter Miller, who preceded her to the grave about four weeks. Her age was 86 years, 4 months, and 13 days. Having been long a faithful member of the church, she passed away in peace. Funeral services by the brethren. ADAM BEAVER.

October 8th, at Shepherdstown, Lowe Cumberland branch, of consumption, sister ELIZABETH MARKLEY, aged 52 years, 6 mos. and 16 days. Her last words were, "Oh, the beautiful river!"

She leaves a husband, two sons, and two daughters to mourn their loss. Funeral sermon by elder Jacob Shamberger, from Rev. 14: 13.

In the lower Conawaga church, York Co., Pa., Nov. 27th, our much beloved minister-ing brother ADAM HOLLINGER, from the effects of an abcess in his side; aged 43 yr's, 3 months, and 10 days.

He bore his sufferings to the last without a murmur. To his faithful and sorrowing widow, (our sister in the Lord,) four daughters, (one of whom has set out for Zion,) two sons, and all the friends, he has left the strongest evidence of a glorious immortality.

With all his suffering and affliction, for nearly 16 months, he selected for his funeral the text, "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, &c.," and the 607th hymn, first two verses to be sung at the house, and the next two at the grave, which was complied with by the ministering brethren. ADAM BEELMAN.

In Adams county congregation, Adams county, Iowa, October 27th, sister MARY WHITE, aged 65 years, 5 months, and 25 days. She united with the church by baptism a little over 4 months ago; lived a consistent Christian till her death.

Funeral services by the writer, from these words, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Job 14: 14, to a large and attentive audience, in the Smith Hall in the town of Milford. N. C. WORKMAN.

In the Vermillion congregation, Livingston county, Ill., November 19th, of typhoid fever, sister ABIGAIL CLAPPER, wife of friend Ephraim Clapper, aged about 37 years. She leaves a sorrowing husband and two small children to mourn their loss. She bore her illness with patience, about ten days, when she fell a victim to death. She was buried in the Brethren's new graveyard, two miles south of Cornell. Funeral occasion improved by the writer, assisted by brother K. Heckman, from Amos 4: 12, "Prepare to meet thy God." It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements, that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Nonconformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God, as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so-called Literary or Political journals.

HOW TO GO WEST.

This is an enquiry which every one should have truthfully answered before he starts on his journey, and a little care taken in examination of Routes will in many cases save much trouble, time and money.

The "C., B. & Q. R. R." running from Chicago, through Galesburg to Burlington, and the "I., B. & W. Route," running from Indianapolis, through Bloomington to Burlington, have achieved a splendid reputation in the last two years as the leading Passenger Routes to the West. At Burlington they connect with the B. & M. R. R. and from the great Burlington Route, which runs direct through Southern Iowa to Nebraska and Kansas, with close connections to California and the Territories; and passengers starting from Blair county, on their way westward, cannot do better than to take the Burlington Route.

This Line has published a pamphlet called "How to go West," which contains much valuable information; a large correct map of the Great West, which can be obtained free of charge by addressing the General Passenger Agent B. & M. R. R. Burlington, Iowa.

Love the Fulfilling of the Law.

As love comprehends the whole duty of man, it is obviously all-important that we learn to distinguish it from its counterfeits. Many, no doubt, entirely mistake the nature of true love. A very common mistake is that of regarding it as a simple emotion. When Christians deplore their coldness and pray for an increase of love, is it not often a pleasurable state of the emotions that they seek? Is not a joyful excitement of the feelings caused by sympathy with others, by the reception of favors, or by the hope of future bliss, often mistaken for love?

Love is not a mere emotion of any kind. The exercise of true love to God and man will generally be attended with emotions deep and abiding; but these emotions do not constitute its essential elements. They instinctively and necessarily arise when God is chosen as the portion of the soul, and consequently we have no moral character. But love may exist without being attended with emotions.

The love of the soul may be no less strong when it is filled with anguish in Gethsemane than when rapt with joy on the mount. Delight or joy arising from a contemplation of the perfections of God is no sure evidence of love to him. Whatever is beautiful and noble instinctively calls forth the admiration of man. The beauties of nature often enkindle joyful emotions in the minds of those possessed of keen sensibility. Excellences of moral character have a like effect. Even the sentimental novel reader rejoices at the noble deeds and successes of the hero of the tale, or weeps over his misfortunes. For the same reason infidels have sometimes given way to ecstatic joy when contemplating the glorious character of God.

An instinctive feeling of gratitude to God as a gracious benefactor may be awakened in the mind without any true love to him. Bad men as well as good exercise this kind of gratitude to those who bestow favors upon them. A strong mutual attachment is naturally formed by those who interchange friendly offices; but if we love those who love us, what thanks have we? for sinners love those who love them. Again: sympathy with the joys and sorrows of others is sometimes mistaken for love. One may greatly rejoice at seeing others happy, or may deeply commiserate the afflicted, and yet have no love for them. His desire to promote the happiness of others, to relieve those in distress, may be strong, and yet never terminate in any action for their good. Such desires have no moral character. "If ye say unto others, depart ye in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?"

The love required in the gospel is a voluntary exercise; in other words, it pertains to the will. God's commands have respect to the power of choice. "My son, give me thine heart." "Set your affections on things above, not on things on earth." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." These passages, as well as numerous others, imply that love is a voluntary state of mind, for which we are responsible.

Benevolence, then, or good will, is the fundamental element of that love which is the fruit of the Holy Spirit. The heart or will is set upon pleasing God, and upon glorifying his name above all things else, when love reigns. Good will to man is also implied. Love takes a deep interest in the happiness of all sentient beings, and esteems and treats all objects according to their intrinsic value. It chooses God as the chief good of the soul, and brings all its powers into delightful subjection to his will.

The love of benevolence is an active principle, while emotional love is passive. The latter is satisfied with the luxury of self-enjoyment, and wastes the energies God has given for noble purposes in a kind of spiritual dissipation; the former looks away from self and finds enjoyment, without seeing it in self-denying, cross-bearing labors for Christ.

Let it not be inferred from any of the foregoing remarks that the idea is intended to be conveyed that love can exist without deep sensibility of soul. Though the emotional nature may be stirred to its very depths without any submission of the will to God, yet the submission of the will implies all right feelings, all holy desires and affections. Love to God fills the soul with deep penitence on account of sin, causes it to overflow with gratitude for his manifold blessings, and to rejoice in his infinite perfections and glories. But the impression which I wish to leave upon the minds of my readers is that obedience, not flights of joy, is the best of love. "This is the love of God," says the apostle, "that we keep his commandments." Says the Savior, "Whoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Measure your love, then, beloved, by the sacrifice you are willing to make to honor Christ by advancing the interests of his kingdom, and not by your willingness to feast upon the joys which a religion may afford in this life, or to secure the bliss which heaven will impart. Love to God produces submission to his will, and love to man that which worketh no ill. All contrary to God's will in our hearts must be driven out; for being filled with the fullness of God, no room can there remain for sin or uncleanliness, because we can not be more than full. And now may God grant us more of his love, and a full endowment of his Holy Spirit is my prayer.

H. S. ZIMMERMAN.

Our Daily Duty.

BY DR. J. HAYNES.

Is it for things that perish,
Man should only slave and toil?
And his daily wants replenish,
By the tillage of the soil?
Is the clattering of the mill
Voices only that may call?
Is it at the loom and anvil
Graver duties daily fall?

No! there's something sweet and softly
Speaking to the soul of man!
Prompting him to things more lofty
In life's concentrated plan!
Daily duties high and holy,
Far above all earthly kind,
Are the acquisitions solely
Of the heart, and soul, and mind.

Truth and friendship are the beauties,
Beauties that adorn the heart;
Love and goodness—these are duties,
Duties of a higher art!
Riches great and peerless beauty,
Thousands covet while they live;
But ambition's noble duty
Is the learning to forgive!

For the COMPANION.

Passing Away.

The present year is fast passing away, and with it many scenes and incidents sink into oblivion. Nations are formed, kingdoms arise and fall. All appears to be in a progressive movement. One passing scene is hurrying another into action. The great political campaign, with all its strife and contests, has now abated, and will soon be numbered with the things that are past. Some of the prominent men of our country have passed away with this year, and are alike numbered with the pale nations of the dead. Many of us look back over the present year with feelings of sorrow, in consequence of the removal of friends and relatives, by the relentless hands of death; while others have moved into distant lands to earn a livelihood for the little ones that have gathered around the festal board.

We entered upon the present year prospectingly. We perhaps proposed to acquire a little more wealth, a better livelihood. We thought perhaps to gain more knowledge; as christians, aimed to advance in the cause of Christ. We thought perhaps we would be more kind to our fellow men, that the door of mercy should be more fully opened to the poor. Our hearts swelled with gratitude to God, and we perhaps thought the present year would be an eventful one in our career—be one of fruitfullness to ourselves and to our fellow men. The old year is fast wearing away, and what have we gained? Our resolutions are things of the past. If we have done good, it has been realized; if we have been negligent of our duty, it alike is numbered with the past, and is written upon the pages of time, to be for or against us in eternity, Unconverted man, at the commencement of this year you resolved to not let the year pass, without your return to God. But through some agency or other you have let your resolution pass stealthily along with the year, and no advancement has yet been made towards the conversion of the soul. The festive season which is now approaching with its festivities, sleigh-rides and balls, perhaps, will again lull you into a state of insensibility; you will thus pass the year with your resolutions unheeded and unobserved, and ere you are again aroused from this lethargy of soul, you may pass down the stream of life, and land with the rich man, in torment.

Passing away! Oh, this is something that should interest all. Experience teaches us that all that is mortal is doomed to decay. God says, "From dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." How oft is this solemn truth made manifest to us. Your unworthy writer has witnessed this, the past seasons, and with feelings of sorrow we here advert to the scenes when we stood around the death bed of a kind brother or sister. The seasons of joy we held together in this life are now past. No more will we gather together under the paternal roof in singing hymns, or in social conversation enjoy ourselves with them. They have passed away, never more to return. But, blessed be the thought! "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away," says the Savior; and he has said that, if we live in accordance with his will, after death we can go to him, and see all the loved ones gone before. There we can live where the "wicked cease from troubling and the weary are forever at rest."

Brethren and sisters, let us improve the time yet allotted unto us; let us improve the passing moments, that we may make improvement as we advance in years, and have all done and be able to stand, when we meet that great Judge upon his throne, who will judge us for our actions here, whether they be good or bad. Yours, fraternally,

S. T. BOSSERMAN.

Comfort to the Afflicted.

My object in the present article is, to lead afflicted parents to feel that it is well with them, and well with their departed children. In view of this I remark, that the death of your child was well—a righteous event. It is true. Too often is the feeling cherished, that God has no right thus to sunder the ties which bind the parent to the child. How strange, the unsubdued heart rises in rebellion against the providence which covered it with such clouds; and instead of bowing before God, and learning the lessons of wisdom which the event is calculated to teach, their lips break forth with impious murmers and unavailing regrets. God is the maker and the sole proprietor and the eternal, uncreated source of all things. He has a right to give life or to withhold it, to take it away or to preserve it. If a man loses his breath he only loses what is not and never was his own. If a child is taken away, you are deprived only of a lent blessing. Your care of it would not make you its parent, or its lawful possessor; no care which you could bestow, no money or sacrifice you could make. Nor can the near and intimate relation which you sustain to your children, the love you bear them, and the money you expend for them, change the relationship which they sustain to God, their heavenly Parent. They are his beyond all question; and hence, when he calls for them and takes them home to dwell in light and in his own presence, you only surrender what was God's before.

Just now my thoughts go back to the death of Elveretta Stoockey, daughter of brother Simon and sister Annie Stoockey, with whom I was intimately acquainted. When I enjoyed the association of the family, at a home of grace, Elveretta was one that bowed with us, her sweet voice united with ours in hymning the praises of Jesus, our best friend.

No doubt brother and sister Stockey expected this daughter to remain with them years to come. But the pale messenger came along, said, "It is enough, thy days are numbered. It is appointed" &c. God bless the mourning parents, whose streaming tears flow o'er their children dead.

To God this life appears in a different light from what it does to us. He sees it through a clear atmosphere, and judges more correctly of its work. Knowing that God forsees all things, we have reason to admire His wisdom in removing children from the sorrows that beset our path. We are born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. All our life-long we moan and weep, and from the cradle to the grave, bewail our lot.

It is not likely, that the daughter above named would escape sorrow, or that she would be the first to pass through life untouched by its trials and unaffected by its bitterness. I ask the question, if God foresaw that the form which you embraced with such tenderness would be racked with anguish and distracted with sorrow, is it not wise in Him to take it to himself in glory, where there are no tears? And is it not a blessing to you to know that your child has escaped the sorrows incident to life—exchanged the troubled pillow of sickness for perpetual life, the groans of earth for the bliss of heaven? It is evident that children are the blessed of the kingdom of heaven. There is one reflection eminently suited to the subject: if nothing sinful enters heaven, we have reason to fear that some parents will be separated from their children in the world to come. If the father and mother enter into that state and place of purity, they must be washed, regenerated, sanctified; they must repent and become as little children, or they can in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven. Will any who have buried children listen to my voice? Peter said, "The promise is unto you and to your children." Jesus said, "Of such is the kingdom of God." They weep not, they suffer not. Like the insect which you once saw in the chrysalistic state, but which has changed its groveling form for one of beauty, so a child breaks the chrystal of time, spreads his wings, and upward flies into the clear light of heaven's eternal glory.

No one feels the death of a child as a mother feels it. The father cannot realize it thus. True, there is a vacancy in his home, and a heaviness in his heart, there is a chain of association that at set times comes round with its broken link; there are memories of endearment, a keen sense of loss, a weeping over crushed hopes, and a pain of wounded affection: but the mother feels that one has been taken away who was still closer to her heart. Hers has been the office of constant ministration. Every gradation of feature developed before her eyes; she detected every new gleam of infant intelligence; she heard the first utterance of every stammering word; she was the refuge of its fears, the supply of its wants, and every task of affection wove a new link and made dear to her its objects; and when her child dies, a portion of her own life, as it were, dies with it. How can she give her darling child up, with all these loving memories, these fond associations? The timid hands that have so often taken hers, in trust and love, how can the mother fold them on its sinless breast, and submit them to the cold clasp of death? The head that she has pressed to her lips and bosom that she has watched in peaceful slumber and in burning sickness, a hair of which she could not see harmed, oh! how can a mother consign it to the dark chamber of the grave! The mother learns from the child blessed lessons of simplicity, sincerity, purity, faith; and it unseals in the heart of the mother a gushing, never-ebbing tide of affection. Suddenly it is taken away, and that home is left dark and silent; and to the vain and heart-rending aspirations, "Shall our dear child ever return again?" there breaks forth in response, through the cold, gray silence, "Nevermore! oh, nevermore!"

Listen, bereaved parents, and you will hear your children singing, 'Glory to God in the highest!" Look dear brother and sister, father, mother, and you will see their heads crowned with glory! A few Sundays ago, I heard brother Samuel Burger say, (in our closing services at church) he well remembered that he had a little brother and sister that had gone to that spirit clime, to a blessed immortality, far beyond the grave. When he uttered those words the tears began to find their way down the cheeks of many hearers. Methinks they said within one heart, "I too, remember when our little William closed his eyes in death; another, "I do know when my little sister looked upon me with a smile, though in the agonies of death, and pointed upwards." Yes, dear father, mother, brother, sister, instead of desponding, prepare to follow your loved ones to the home appointed for all the living.

"The angel bands come singing down,
And one has got my starry crown,
And one my robe of white."

My Prayer.

BY LOVINE H. BURKHART.

Jesus, lover of my soul.
May thy still waters onward move
Until we reach that land above
Where peaceful rivers roll.
Jesus, lover of all good,
Help us to live a life divine,
That thou wilt own us all as thine,
Redeem'd by thy own blood.

Jesus, lover of the truth,
May I still nearer come to thee
And guard my tongue that I may be More like thee while in youth.
Jesus, lover of the weak,
Thy strength sufficient is for all,
For birds, and beasts, and worms that crawl,
And us, if Christ we seek.

Jesus lover of the mild,
Who calms the wildest raging storm,
And saves his people from all harm,
Will own this sinful child.
Jesus, lover of the strong,
Who breaks temptation's mighty bands,
Still reaches forth his pow'rful hands
To those that flee from wrong.

Jesus, lover of thy peace,
It is my wish, if its thy will,
To live in peace with all, and still Praise God, and never cease.
Jesus, lover of my heart,
Guide me into that Heav'nly land,
And lead me with thy pow'rful hand,
Where friends may never part.

Jesus, cleanse us all from sin,
So we may meet on Canaan's shore,
Where parting will be known no more,
When Christ invites us in.
Jesus lover of my soul,
When trials here on earth are past,
Receive us home to Heav'n at last,
Where living waters roll.

Thoughts on Human Responsibility.

BY M. NEAD.

The incarnate life of every human soul gives it a distinctive indivvduality. Emanating, as it does, from the infinite source of all life, with specific life forces, it, in its union or association with a material organism, enters upon a career of reponsibility. This responsibility grows out of the nature of its own powers in connection with the relation it sustains to its Creator and Governor. Created with capacities for the highest degree, of enjoyment it owes its entire homage to that Creator; and in proportion as it lives within the sphere of his divine sympathy, and communes with his sanctifying Spirit, will be its favorable development, and its present and ultimate happiness.

God is a Governor, and he governs his intelligences by law. Now, in the nature of things, wherever there is law governing intelligences, there must be responsibility; and wherever there is responsibility, there must be law. If there is a divine law to which man is amenable, there must of necessity be in his mental constitution a capacity to comprehend the nature of that law, for it is in the capacity to comprehend law, and the relation he sustains to it, that we have one of the fundamental bases of man's responsibility. This capacity inheres in the faculty of judgment; aided, however, by reason and other intellectual powers. It is by these that he comprehends the nature of truth and falsehood, and of right and wrong. Without this capacity to perceive the relation of agreement or disagreement between the nature of human actions and the divine law, there certainly can be no responsibility.

But the existence of this capacity only constitutes one element of responsibility; and of itself could not make man accountable to his Creator; for, though he may be able to distinguish clearly between the nature of truth and error, and readily perceive the relation of agreement or disagreement existing between an act and the divine law as set forth in the holy scriptures, or out-written by the finger of God in his works, if there be no sense of obligation, no emotion of approval in the one case or disapproval in the other; if there be no monitory impulse within to prompt him to do that which is in accordance with the divine law, and to turn from and reject that which is contrary to that law, an essential element of responsibility is wanting. In man's moral nature we find the monitor that supplies this element. The power or faculty of conscience gives rise to the sense of obligation and the inward monition to do that which accords with the divine law, and to reject that which is contrary to it. So we have in man the essential elements of moral responsibility—reason and judgment to perceive and know, and conscience to generate the obligation.

These are original powers of the human soul; and we may, I think, truthfully say, that they are possessed in sufficient degree by all sane persons to render them justly responsible to the moral Governor of the universe. Each one of these, however, operates in its own sphere of activity, and neither can supply the place of the other. Their operations are often confounded by authors and as a consequence crude and imperfect ideas have obtained in the minds of many with reference to the nature of conscience, and the extent of its operations. Some attach to it, as a faculty, something of a judicial nature; making it bear the relation of a determining power to truth and error, right and wrong, &c.—an idea that we regard as an error, and which we will examine farther.

That it is the understanding, (aided by reason,) and not conscience, that always determines the true and the false in morals, and that perceives the relation of agreement or disagreement existing between actions and the divine law, is apparent from two important considerations:—

First. In all questions which in their nature do not involve moral principles, and over which the moral faculty has no jurisdiction whatever, the critical faculty, i. e. judgment and reason, certainly determines the truth and falsehood involved in any problem or subject brought before it. The results of such determinations are judgments formed in view of the relation perceived to exist among the facts and principles involved. Such judgments we might say are daily being formed by the human mind in all questions connected with science and mathematics and the whole field of facts and principles not connected with morals. Now if, when we come to the field of morals, we insist that it is the faculty of conscience, that determines the truth or falsehood involved, and perceives the relation of agreement or disagreement existing between the act and the divine law, we are reduced to the necessity of admitting that there are in the human soul two distinct faculties of judgment—the one to form judgments, and determine what is truth and error in one field of facts and their relation—and quite another to form similar judgments in another and different field.

To admit that there are two distinct faculties of judgment in the human soul, is to say that it is necessary that there be two such faculties that the relations existing among the facts and principles involved in all moral questions and those existing among the facts and principles in which the question of morality does not enter, are so dissimilar in their nature, that the same faculty, or power of the soul, is not competent to form judgments in both these provinces of the soul's activity. Now, we are very free to say, that we think that the relation of congruity and incongruity—of agreement or disagreement—existing among the facts and principles taken cognizance of by the soul, in every sphere of its activity are determined by the same process of mentality, and by the same power; and that power is the judgment, or understanding.

Secondly. The sense of obligation always succeeds the intellection or conclusion of the judgment, and also changes with a change in its determinations. Every person of correct motives, before acting, or entering upon a course of conduct, will ask himself the qustion with reference to the contemplated action, "Is it right?" Immediately the critical faculty goes to work to examine the nature of the act to see whether it agrees with the principles of the divine law; and the impulsive monition of the conscience, to do, or not to do, will be just as the determinations of the faculty of judgment are, as to whether there be a relation of agreement or disagreement existing between the act and the law.

In many instances the existence of this relation is so obvious, that it is perceived instantaneously. The judgment is then said to be intuitive. In others, again, there is more obscurity, and a careful examination of the matter, in all its bearings and from different stand-points, is necessary to the formation of the judgment. But whether the determinations of the judgment be immediate or prolonged, the sense of obligation must succeed it.

If the monitions of conscience are subsequent to the conclusions of the intellect, it follows that, if, in the enlargement of our ideas and increase of our knowledge we acquire new and different notions of the divine law, there will be a corresponding change in the promptings of conscience in reference to it. Thus the Hindoo wife, with her imperfect knoledge of God's law, in obedience to her religon sacrifices her own offspring by casting it into the rolling waters of the Ganges, or willingly meets her own death by perishing on the funeral pyre of her husband. But if her understanding be enlightened by the truths of Christianity, her offspring is not sacrificed, but is "trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and her own body is not committed to the flames, but patiently abides the will of Heaven.

The apostle Paul, before his conversion, with great zeal and energy persecuted the followers of Christ, and verily thought, as he tells us, that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." But after his conversion, when his mind had undergone a change, and he had acquired new ideas of Jesus and Christianity, he was equally zealous and energetic in doing the very things for the doing of which he before was ready to punish others with death. He was equally conscientious before and after his conversion; but the monitions of his conscience changed, whenever the light of truth illuminated his understanding, and changed his ideas concerning Christianity and the divine law: thus we see that "Conscience changes her mandates as reason changes her conclusions."

By way of reflection we would say that, in the foregoing view of the subject, we very readily see the transcendent importance of correct teaching. If, from erroneous ideas, we may be conscientious in doing that which is wrong in the sight of Heaven, is it not a matter of superior moment that we look well to the source of our knowledge? The apostolic injunction, to add to "faith, virtue; and to virtue knowledge," should be of especial concern to all. A clear conception of truth in all its relations is knowledge; and truth is but the manifestation of the will of the Infinite. That will is written on every part of the material universe—the great rock of nature—but more especially, so far as it relates to man and his duties and privileges, is it written in the Holy Scriptures. This is the source from which man as a probationer of time, a traveler to another mode of existence, should gather his knowledge.

For the Companion.

The Kingdom of God.

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The foregoing is the language of our adorable Redeemer, when addressing the multitude in his sermon on the Mount. I think we, as brethren and sisters, all agree, that whatever Christ commanded his apostles to do is now binding on us. He became the way for our salvation; and, therefore, whatever the apostles were commanded to do, is now necessary for us to do. Well, Christ has positively said, or commanded, that we shall first seek the kingdom of God; that is as much as to say, we shall first seek an interest in the blessings of Christ's righteousness and reign. We all claim, and preach, that the true followers of Christ are in duty bound to comply with all the commands that Christ has given us through the inspired apostles.

Are we all complying with the command above quoted? If not, I think it is high time that we do; for I do believe that it is the most important command between the two lids of the Bible. But we must all confess, that we come short of our duty in this respect; for it is often the case, that we labor for the body from day to day, and year to year, without perhaps even thinking that we should always take the first meal of each day with God, in bringing our family around the altar of prayer to thank the Lord for his daily blessings. Doing this it would look a little like first seeking the kingdom of God; and then, according to Christ's promises, all the necessaries of life for the day will be added unto us. But perhaps instead of doing this we rise early and hurry breakfast as fast as possible, so we can pursue our daily labor, without ever thinking that our first duties are to come before God, to return our grateful thanks to him for his Fatherly care during the night. Instead of this we take the first meal to gratify our appetites; and, perhaps without even returning thanks to God for the same, just as if we had earned them by our own efforts, not thinking that we brought nothing into this world and can carry nothing out, but that all we possess here is the gift of God. If he would not crown our labors, and send us rain and sunshine, our efforts would be all in vain.

We are even commanded, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or drink." By this we can understand that we shall have our whole minds and thoughts fixed upon heavenly things, and just labor here, and have our things as though we had them not; for all things are of God. We are also commanded to lay up treasures in heaven, that our hearts may be there. On the other hand, we are forbidden to lay up treasures on earth. But how often do we see men labor and toil, from day to day, and hoard up treasure upon treasure, add farm to farm, till they are worn out and die, (brethren not excepted,) and, perhaps, have never laid up any treasures in heaven.

It is impossible to have our hearts at different places at the same time; for we learn that where our treasures are there will our hearts be also. So we must conclude that those who lay up treasures upon earth have their hearts there also; and, consequently, cannot have them in heaven. We are also commanded, that, if we have food and raiment, we should be content. But how many are contented with those things that are really necessary for the body? But if we first make our peace with God, and seek to please him, and it pleases God to give us earthly treasures, and have not our hearts fixed upon them, but possess them as though we have them not, then we can still meet the approbation of God.

In conclusion I will yet refer the readers to Rom. 14: 17, 18, which reads as follows: "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God and approved of men." So brethren and sisters, let us first seek the kingdon of God, and we are sure that the others things which are necessary will follow.

Christian Family Companion

DALE CITY, PA., Dec. 17, 1872.

Valedictory to Volume Eight.

It is with pleasure and gratitude that we come before our readers, in a farewell address, at the close of the year 1872. Although the new year has not yet fully come, it is casting its light sufficiently in advance to admonish us that it is close by. We therefore say, to one and all, we wish you a happy New Year.

We confess to many doubts and fear during the current year, concerning the affairs of God's Kingdom. The reports of the success of the Gospel indicate that in many places it has prospered almost as finely as in primitive times, while in places where it once flourished, it has waned, and the love of the plain, simple truth,—"the power of God to the salvation of all that believe"—has lost its hold upon the hearts of its professors, and worldly appliances have well nigh supplanted the Gospel altogether. It is painful to confess it, but Bible knowledge, especially that which relates to the salvation of men, is rapidly giving way before the encroachments of other things upon the minds of the people.

We have not been altogether unmindful of our duties in publishing and preaching, but have endeavored, with much fear and trembling, to declare the whole counsel of God, and to keep the simplicity of the Gospel before the people. Whenever it appeared necessary, we have not been backward in exposing the erroneous teachings of others, and in protecting the Brethren from the tendency which exists to depart from the simplicity that is in Christ. The rudiments of the world, the commandments of men, and the show of learning, and the wisdom of the present evil age, have well nigh covered up the wisdom which is from above in the minds of many.

The COMPANION is the same now that it ever was—and by the grace of God we trust it ever will remain—the fearless and unflinching advocate of the "Thus says the Lord" plea in all matters of religious faith and practice. Where the Bible speaks, it speaks; where the Bible is silent, it is silent; preferring the wisdom of God to the wisdom of men; the teaching of divinely inspired men to that of men of no inspiration; and the examples, precepts, and practices found in the New Testament, to the institutions of men.

So if you love the Bible, stand by the COMPANION; if you revere the teachings of the apostles stand by the COMPANION; if you wish to see the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and the practice of the apostles prevail, stand by the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION; and unitedly we will push on from victory to victory, until the Lord shall come. Let all be up and a doing, and do our work well, as those who must give an account at the great day of the Lord.

A year fraught with consequences of great importance to the lovers of primitive Christianity is before us, some of which are of deep interest to COMPANION friends. The missionary cause, of which the COMPANION has been a constant advocate, is being received with favor. Already a mission has been inaugurated in the New England States, and we have been bringing, and hope to continue to bring weekly messages from the evangelists, from their new fields of labor. The Western District of Pennsylvania, at its last meeting, took measures which we hope will yet result in a great work for the spreading of the true gospel knowledge. The subject of education among us will also be revived, and measures set afoot that are intended to result in great good. In fact, it appears to us, that the year 1873 will be an auspicious one, and no brother or sister who feels an interest in the success of the cause in which we are enlisted can afford to be without the the messenger that will bear the tidings of the success or reverses of these great interests.

For a number of years we have had your confidence. Shall we have it another year? We ask you once more to stand by us and yourselves in keeping the pure Gospel before the people. As far as possible every family should have a religious paper, as well as a family Bible; and when they are making a selection they may as well get the best. We respectfully invite all who are now receiving the paper to renew at once, and do us and the Gospel a good work, by sending, in addition to their own names, one or more subscribers, if not for a full, year for six, or even three months.

Editor's Diary.

On Saturday, Dec. 7th, we took the noon train westward, to Mineral Point; changed cars for Somerset Branch; thence to Shamrock, where we left the railroad and walked about two miles, to the house of elder Tobias Meyers's. Brother M. was not at home, when we landed, but returned shortly afterwards; and brought with him brother Michael Kimmell, of Lanark, Ills., whom we were happy to meet, having lodged with him during our western visit last summer. This was our first visit to the Middle Creek congregation, and to the house of brother Meyers. After spending a pleasant afternoon, in the evening we repaired to the Pleasant Hill meeting-house, where an appointment was made for preaching. Brother Kimmell spoke first in the German language, from the words: "This day shalt thou be in paradise with me," and we followed with remarks in English. Had a respectable attendance, taking all things into consideration; the horse disease being at its height, and there were several other meetings in the vicinity. Lodged at brother Meyers's.

SUNDAY, 8TH. Preaching at the same place, at 10 o'clock. It fell to our lot to serve, which we tried to do as God gave ability, brother Kimmell following. Congregation rather small. Took dinner at brother Wm. Meyers's, another minister in the same congregation, whom we had frequently met, but had not visited him before. Spent a pleasant afternoon with the family, and the friends who were guests with us.

Preaching again in the evening, at the same place, with a large turnout, brother Kimmell and I serving. Lodged with brother Tobias Meyers. Our young brother Jacob T. Meyers was now at home. He had been to hear brethren Sell and Kountz, who preached near Somerset, on Saturday evening. We, too, had expected to meet brother Sell at this place, but the brethren here saw proper to make two appointments at the same time. Brother Jacob was called to the ministry last fall, and is striving to make himself useful in his calling. And we believe he will do it, God granting his blessing.

On Monday morning we returned home, brother Jacob accompanying us to Mineral Point.

We were pleased with the visit, only that we suffered considerably from the cold. We almost resolved not to go from home again during the cold weather, since we are afflicted with catarrh in the head, upon which the cold is severe.

To Our Agents.

Our agents will please send in what names they have on their lists without further delay, and we will send another outfit, when desired. It is of great importance that we have the bulk of our subscription list upon our books before the first of January, in order that our addressing machine may be put into operation. Therefore, we request that, whether you have all you expect to get or not, whether or not you have all collected, please send us what names you have, so that those who have promptly subscribed may be promptly served. Other business matters may be adjusted afterwards.

So far the prospects are very encouraging. Some of the places heard from have increased upon the number of last year. Brother Jacob Conner, of East Coventry, Pa., has sent us a list of twenty seven names, and expects to add more. Brother Christian Meyers, of Green Mount, Va., sent us ten names, with the cash. Brother S. L. Glass, of North Georgetown, Ohio, and Elder Michael Beshoar, of Mifflintown, Pa., have sent us fair lists, and expect to do more. Others have reported with success.

The Epizootty.

This terrible disease that is infesting the land is interfering with our business interests, as well as with others. In many places it has impeded the conveyance of the mails, and some lines have failed altogether. Thus our papers have been delayed and lost. And brother Bashore, of Juniata county, Pa., informs us that on account of his horse being sick he could not ride around to solicit subscribers, as he was wont to do, and being too old to walk, could not obtain the number he would otherwise have obtained. He, however, induced a young brother to assist him. We would recommend the plan to our aged friends, to obtain the co-operation of younger brethren and sisters, who can better endure canvassing in the country during the the winter. When old and young will thus work together, we may expect a successful year, notwithstanding the epizootic.

The First Number of Volume Nine will be dated January seventh, but we expect to issue it several days in advance of date, and then try to keep a little ahead throughout the year—no adverse circumstances preventing. We would certainly desire to do so, and nothing worries us so much as when our paper gets behind time; but we had obstacles to contend with which defied all our efforts. Nevertheless we shall set out with the New Year with a resolution that fate only can prevent our success. It shall not be from want of effort on our part.

The Forney-Meyers Controversy.

Brother J. T. Meyers has concluded to drop the discussion of the subject upon which brother Meyers and he have been exercising their debating talents for some time past. He still thinks it is true, and therefore right to preach it, that "in the midst of life we are in death;" but as the readers of the COMPANION are convinced already; and as he thinks it is useless to pursue the subject any farther, and especially since it involves no saving principle. And so the volume closses the discussion. Good.

"A man convinced against his will,
Is of the same opinion still,"

Our position upon the question at issue between the two brethren, reminds us of an anecdote related to us of Elder Henry Kurtz. Some brother was relating an argument he had had with some other brother, giving his opponent's position with an air decidedly sarcastic.

"Das ist ein guter Sinn." (That is a good view) was the old brother's reply.

"But that is not my view," replied brother A.

"Ah; what is your position?" inquired brother Kurtz.

Then brother A. proceeded to give his opinion, very precisely, to which brother K. gave careful attention, and then replied:

"Well, das ist auch ein guter Sinn." (This is also a good view.)

So we think it is a good view to say that when a man is in the midst of life he is subject to, and in danger of death, for it has often been proven; and we believe the author of the sentence: "In the midst of life we are in death," meant to express just that view. Then, again, it is a good view to say that when a man dies, his life is at an end, for death is the cessation of life. We believe it will be all the same with us a hundred years after this, no matter which brother's views are correct.

Corrections—Almanac.

In the Dr. Fahrney Advertisement, on the second page of the Almanac cover, middle of first column, read, your medicine, instead of "our medicine." The Panacea is composed of thirty-three vegetable ingredients, instead of three, as some have it. In the last paragraph read remuneration, instead of "renumeration."

Do not forget to renew your subscriptions as soon as this number comes to hand, if you have not already done so.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Drinking in the United States

It is idle to talk about any important change for the better in the moral and social conditions of the country, while the appalling habits of drinking continues. Men who ought to be eminent patterns and examples of sobriety "drink with the drunken," and become drunkards themselves; and of course their children follow in their course. Strenuous efforts must be put forth to stay the plague. Under the returns made by the census, it appears that in addition to 63,314'627 gallons of home-made spirits, and 7,159,740 barrels of fermented liquors on which taxes were paid in 1871, were imported of wine, 9,788,983 gallons and 421,562 dozen bottles; of spirits, 2, 629, 326 gallons, and 123, 627 dozen bottles, and of malt liquors 832, 431 gallons. It appears, furthermore, that the consumers put about $500,000,000 every year in the pockets of the dealers. The proportion of those licensed to sell liquor is about one in every 250 of the population, and those who have figured very closely claim that every eighty drinkers support a drinking establishment and consume 400 gallons of spirits, 80 of wine, and 2,000 of beer, annually. The State of New York has 23,746 licensed sellers, or one for every 180 of its population, while one in 60 to 90 of its people are engaged in these liquor stores! The city of New York has 7,181 licensed sellers of drink, or one for 140 of the population, while one in 50 to one in 70 are engaged in drink selling. Massachusetts, in 1871, had 8,622 of its people licensed to sell, and one in every 85 engaged in selling drink. Pennsylvania has 14,431 licensed, or one to every 240. Ohio had 12,377 licensed, or one in every 210. Illinois had 9,569 licensed, or one in every 260. Maine has 1,063, or one in every 600. As to the other States, the range is between 100 to 200, and one in 600.

Arrival of 600 Mormons.

Our foreign papers last week contained an announcement of the embarkation, on a single steamer at Liverpool, of six hundred Mormons for this port. They arrived on the 16th, and have already left by a special train for Utah. They are in charge of Mormon agents from the time of their leaving Europe until they reach their destination, and have been joined by a few Mormons from this vicinity, who will accompany them to Salt Lake. There are in the company just arrived 256 Scandinavians, 25 Scotch, 12 Welch, 4 Irish, 295 English, and 6 returning missionaries.

It is sad to see so many fresh recruits brought under the power of this gross delusion, and led away to join the ranks of Brigham Young's subjects. Many will doubtless awake to their delusion when they reach Mormon territory, as many have before them. The mass of them are probably like thousands which have previously arrived, ignorant and led astray with the promises of plenty in a new and unknown region. The converts to this base form of religion are nearly all of this class upon whom it is easy to impose—unenlightened and incredulous. They are not Americans who join the ranks, but Scandinavians and ignorant English. Mormonism is not an excresence of American growth, though on our soil it receives its strength and increase from abroad. Now, that these people are in our land, one thing should be done for them, and that is give them the gospel. The Christian Church should greatly enlarge its missionary efforts in this direction.—*N. The Dead Sea.

Ere we drop down from the hills of Judah into the ghor, plain, the sun has got up high in heaven; and as we gaze into the valley below, the blue and shining waters of the Bahr Lout appear to our blinking eyes more lovely than the tenderest Italian lakes, when seen from the Alpine tops. How long these tantalizing waters are in sight! Sinking from dip to dip, we come upon a wide and broken terrace of find mold, mixed with chalk, which from the hights above had seemed to be the natural bed or level of the plain. But when we reach the terrace, it is found to be only the first and and broadest of successive levels. We fall to a second, then to a third smooth table of alluvial soil. These stairs by which you descend from the last range of hills to the ghor, the true level of the Dead Sea, have a common character, produced, no doubt, by a common cause. They have all been under water. Where they have not been worn and furrowed, their smoothness is like that of a sandy beach. They are lapped by ancient shorelines, ribbed by ancient waves. Near the lake end of the river bed, the plain is dotted with a multitude of cones or hills, about fifty feet high, their crowns level with each other, and their sides smooth and round as the ebb and flow of water will wear a platform of marl or clay. These cones are so regular in shape as to resemble works of art; the tombs of the sheikhs in times when men were giants, with natural pyramids for graves.

It is a strange and memorable scene. High moutains to the east and to the west: the heights of Abraham, the crest of Gilead, the Mountain of Temptation; on our right-hand, the burned cities of Lot; on our left-hand, the ruins of Gilgal and Jericho; in our front, the long flat plain of sand and ashes, the green fringe of the sacred stream, and slanting across that river the ford over which Joshua passed, and in which Jesus was baptized by John. Not a cloud flecks the sky, nor a branch stirs the air, not a ripple moves the lake. No voice of bird, no hum of insect, breaks the oppressive hush. Pitiless streams the light upon these blinding sands. Here and there, along the shore, lie stems and boles of trees; old giants, torn by the floods from the Jordan banks, dashed down into the Sea of Salt, tossed back in storms from its angry clutch, steeped thick with brine, and left to peel and whiten. As we strip to bathe, two vultures, gnawing at a dead camel, scream and soar into the air, wheel, cry, and sink upon one of these skeleton trunks, fixing their fiery eyes on a vission of white flesh, and never slacken their vampire gaze as long as we splash and plunge round the rocky isle. Some people call the Dead Sea noisome. This must be done in obedience to a monkish tale invented by Greeks, who never wash, and repeated by Italians, who cannot swim. Now, bathing on the beach at Malaga is good, in the Nile at Gizeh delicious, in the cave at Capri superb; but in these and all other waters level with the sea, there is an easy limit to the word which expresses enjoyment of a bath. The pleasure is human, and may be borne, like the flavor of fine wine, the taste of a rich fruit, the zest of a quick ride. But a plunge in the Bahr Lout is an essay by itself. Either from the glowing light, from the fevered blood, or from the cooling brine, your first dive into the Dead Sea is not a common bath, but an experiment in the unknown animal delights of life.—W. H. Dixon.

Brain work is sanitary work. Nay, it is a necessary condition, more or less of it, of health in advanced life, a necessary preventative of cerebral decay. Not only moral purification but growth in intelligence, in wisdom, is the divinely appointed result of human life as a probation, and nature deals out her penalties for the neglect of the latter, as well as for the neglect of the former.

From Fredonia, Kansas.

Beloved Brother:—I will try to pen a few lines for the COMPANION.

We are but few in number, living near Fredonia, Wilson county, Kansas. There are about fourteen members. We have no speaker living here. Brother Isaac Hershy is bishop over us. We have no regular meetings; but would like very much if some of our eastern and more favored brethren would heed our cries and send some of their surplus preachers. The harvest is truly great.

Our neighbors are kindly disposed towards us, and think us a peculiar people.

We had a love-feast this fall in a tent prepared for the occasion, on the premises of brother J. F. Hess; the first ever held in Southern Kansas. We had good attendance, order, and a profitable meeting. Brother I. Hershy and Sidney Hodgdon were our main speakers. Our meeting was on the 12th and 13th of October.

The forenoon sermon of the 13th was the funeral occasion in memory of our sister in Christ, Christena Flack, who died August 23d, of dropsy of the heart, after a short illness, at the house of her niece, Lucy Myers. She was about 54 years of age, and had been a zealous sister in the church of the Brethren ever since her youth. She never was married. She was earnest in advocating the cause of her Redeemer, and had the tenderness and sympathy of a mother, in sickness. Her death and separation from us is mourned by all who knew her. The text was Revelation 7th chapter, from the 13th verse to the close of the chapter. The 577 and 658 hymns were sung by request of the friends, they being favorites with her during her lifetime.

We had one to unite with us by baptism during our meeting. He had been a member of the Campbellite church for a good while; but came over to the Brethren, being fully persuaded that we are on the right way.

So we feel encouraged to go on and try to serve the Lord, build up his church here on earth. We pray for union and prosperity in the Christian graces; asking to be remembered kindly by the brethren and sisters at a throne of grace.

Yours in fear of the Lord.

J. W. MAHORNEY.

From D. M. Holsinger.

HARRISBURG, PA.,) Dec., 7th, 1872.)

DEAR SON: Through the mercies of God we were permitted so far to return on our homeward way from the Me. Mission. We left Skowhegan on Monday, Dec. 2d, at 9 45 A. M., arrived at Myerstown on Wednesday, 4th, at about 3 P. M., where we stopped off till this morning, and had quite a pleasant time with our dear brethren and sisters in Lebanon County.

On Sunday evening was our last meeting in Maine. Many tears of affection were shed on the occasion; many voices said to us, "Pray for us;" and many a God-speed was invoked upon us by those with whom we sojourned for several weeks. We still enjoy excellent health; stood the travel remarkably well, reached all our points in good order and time, and met with no serious loss or accident. Brother D. L., left here about 30 minutes ago, 11 30 A. M. Now I am alone in the busy city. Expect to reach Martinsburg at 9 P. M., and if God will, to-morrow join in His worship once more with his children there. May He grant it.

This is not intended as a report but a simple notice of our return. Our closing report, and recapitulation are forth-coming. If all is well at home you may expect a visit from me ere long, through Somerset Co., subject to further notice. Love to you.

D. M. HOLSINGER.

HOMERVILLE, O., Dec. 3, 1872.

BROTHER HOLSINGER:—I am in possession of one copy of the Brethren's Tune and Hymn Books, and must say I like the book much better than I had anticipated. The more I peruse it the better I like it. I think every meeting house ought to be well supplied with these books. These books should be purchased by the congregations, and should be kept at the meeting house for general use. Then one should take the lead. They should have singings as often as convenient, and practice on all the pieces in the book. Get the young folks familiar with the book and if this can be accomplished, then we can expect good singing in meeting, and not hear of this. Our young folks then will take an interest in our meetings. They then will sit forward in the house; and, in place of whispering, they will help to sing and praise their Maker. I am aware that there are a few brethren who are opposed to this plan; but they will give in by degrees. We will have to proceed slowly, but surely. This is the way I feel on singing.

C. J. MYERS.

ALTOONA CITY, PA.,)
Nov. 17, 1872.)

DEAR BROTHER:—I feel to drop you a few lines. We had preaching at Altoona to-day. Brother James A. Sell was our minister. He spoke from Luke 13: 25. His views on that portion of scripture were spoken so plainly that any one could understand; and I think those who were present could say, "It was good for us to be there." But our meeting together was only for a little season, and then we had to part again. But could we all be so happy as to meet in that mansion on high, where parting shall be known no more; where tears shall be wiped away from our eyes, and where we can sing the songs of Moses and of the Lamb to greater perfection than we can here below. Here there are trials and troubles to undergo, but they will only make us richer there, when we arrive at home. It seems hard to some to be Christians; but it is not. As a man told me last week, "It is a nice thing to be a Christian." So it is. Why is it, then, that more do not think so. It is now like at the time of Noah; they think but little about their salvation. "The time will come," (and, we believe, has come,) "that they will not endure sound doctrine, but, after their own lust, heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." "And as it was in the time of Noah, so, also, shall the coming of the son of man be."

BROTHER HOLSINGER:—We were made glad by a pleasant little visit, lately, by brother David Brower, who stopped off the train on his return home to his family in Oregon. He moved to that place about one year ago; and this fall he came back on business, to his old home, in Keokuk county. He seems to be well pleased with his new home in Oregon. He says some thirteen came to the church since he is there. He is the only minister of the Brethren in that part of Oregon. Those who wish to write to him will address him at Sublimity, Marion county, Oregon. He preached three times for us, the last sermon at Altoona, in the Campbellite church. We felt sad when we took the parting hand on the platform at Altoona, when he took the train. In all probability we shall never hear him preach any more. We used to hear him frequently. Our church here is increasing slowly, I think five were added this summer by baptism. This is comparatively small to other churches. Perhaps the labors of the Brethren will manifest themselves after awhile, like bread cast upon the waters, to return after many days. And may we, as taught by the Savior, let our light so shine that others may see our works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven. Much depends upon us living out the principles of the doctrine of Christ, which we profess. For the time will come "that judgment will begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what will be the end of them that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

J. W. Moats.

Christian Family Companion.

Nine years ago this paper, which is known by almost every member of the Brotherhood to-day, had no existence. It is true we had that standard religious magazine, the Visitor, but as it has always been only a monthly publication, and as the Brotherhood increased in numbers, as we did, not a few were wishing that God might give it into the hearts of one or the other of our able brethren, to issue a weekly periodical, besides the one which was a welcome monthly visitor to every brother and sister.

At last, after the solicitation and by the advice of some of the warm-in-the-cause brethren, our young brother H. R. Holsinger, put, as it were, all his earthly possession at stake, in order to give a fair trial, to see whether the Brotherhood was ready to support a weekly paper. He started in with less than four hundred subscribers. The Companion, then in its infancy, was printed on a hand press. Of course it was evident to all that God was in the work, and prospered the enterprise year after year. But, as is always the case, when Brother Holsinger was successful with what he, by the help of God had paved the way, some other brethren went in opposition to him, and published other papers. But as all concerned are brethren, so we will not say much on this point, for fear of hurting some one's feelings. The Companion, as said, started out with about four hundred subscribers; which subscription was increased from year to year, until to-day it closes the eighth volume with nearly forty-four hundred. This is all well, as far as it goes; but I learn from one of the histories lately made, of all the denominations in the United States, that we are set down in the round number of 100,000. Now just think of this. One hundred thousand members and only about four thousand subscribers to the principal paper in the Brotherhood. Now, say four members to to every family, which would make it twenty-five thousand families of brethren and sisters, and hardly one-fifth of all these read the paper of our church. Why is it? Answer to yourself. But suppose of these twenty-five thousand families we might excuse five thousand from various causes; inability to read the English language, four thousand; poverty, I doubt, one thousand; which still would leave twenty thousand families who should feel it their duty to support the church periodical. And I certainly believe, by proper exertions, we can get that number to do so.

Then the question arises, what paper shall we support, as we have four in the Brotherhood? Now, then, reason to yourselves, which is entitled most to your support. Lay all selfish motives aside, with a determination to act as brethren should do. I will give some reasons why we should, by all means, support the Companion. The main reason of all this is, that H. R. Holsinger was the cause to some extent at least, that we who have four instead of one periodical in the Church. Consider this well, and if you do, you will agree with me, that the Companion should be supported foremost. Even the world will reward their enterprising people in some way or another. I now remember that only a few years ago, Somerset County could boast of only two county papers, 28 columns each; but through the energy of one of her foremost citizens, a third one (32 columns) was started, and by this example the other two Editors were led to enlarge their papers also, and to day we can boast of as good county papers as any county in the state, and all, we must admit, through the pluck of one man. The result of it was that he was elected to one of the important offices in the county. This is the way this unthankful world will by times reward people, and should we not expect as much of those who claim to be Christians. But as said, I will not say ought against the other periodicals, but would ask if it be more than right, first of all, to support the Gospel Visitor, for the battles it has fought? It would be indeed; but as the great majority of the Brethren want a weekly Companion or Visitor, and as brother Holsinger opened the way in this direction, so by all means subscribe for the Companion. Show to the world, that we are at least as mindfull of our enterprising brethren, as they are. If proper efforts would be made, there is no doubt in my mind, we could raise the subscription list to ten thousand. Now, then, for the work! Who will send in the largest list? Let us hear. But here comes an objection; some may say, Brother Hady is a friend to the editor of the Companion; that's the reason of writing as we do.

Now, brethren, we all claim to be brethren, and if such, should we not, then, be friends also? We can be friends without being brethren; but how we can be brethren without being friends is a mystery to me. Then let us say to ourselves, if we find we have ill feelings, one to another, such things can not, and must not be among Christians. Let us love one another with a pure love, and if we do so, the short-comings of others we gladly will overlook.

But, again, one will say, if only brother Holsinger would not be quite so radical. Now, friends, let me say this much for brother H., that, although he is radical, yet, after giving all a fair trial, you will admit with me that he is sincere. It is true, he might, as others do, call evil good, sometimes, for the sake of gaining a few subscribers, yet, as he wishes to clear his skirts, not only as an editor, but also as a minister of the gospel, he writes and talks as he does. By considering all, we should love him, as a faithful brother, but the more, I feel confident, if we make use of more of that Christian charity which we, as Christ's followers, should and will possess, if we are true children of God, all such things will not keep us from supporting what is so indispensibly needful in the church; namely: the periodicals in which we can consult each other from far and near, and this the Christian Family Companion can be, if it only will receive the support which it so richly deserves. So, brethren, to work at once. In this work all can work; let each think himself in duty bound to work faithfully, and the Companion will come to us not hungry and starving, but filled with gladness in 1873, as in the years passed by, and many a poor soul will find refreshments in the perusal of its contents, and if we work faithfully here in the Master's vinyard in this world, may we not then expect a reward for our feeble efforts, when we can ascribe all honor and glory to him who has promised to take his children to himself.

M. Hady.

Dale City, Pa.

In Memorium of Brother Samuel W. Sears.

Our esteemed brother S. W. Sears, who departed this life in Lee county, Iowa, September 7th, (see obituary,) was a resident of Decatur county, Iowa, and a beloved and loving member of the church in this county. Near two weeks previous to his death, he left home, went to Chicago on business, and returned to Lee county, intending there to visit the friends and acquaintances of his youth; but, ere he arrived at the place of his destination, sickness seized his mortal frame, and a few days later a telegram brought to his aged mother, brothers, sisters, and friends at home, the sad intelligence of his death. The stroke fell heavy indeed; but from our acquaintance with him, we are assured that he knew in whom he believed, and was pursuaded that he is able to keep that he committed unto him against that day. Hence we "sorrow not as those that have no hope."

Brother Samuel from his youth up was ever kind, affectionate, and dutiful; ever heeding the "first commandment with promise;" Eph 6: 1,2. Some twenty-one years ago, he dedicated himself to God, in humble obedience to the holy requirements of the gospel; and until his death, lived a faithful member of the church. Much moral, as well as intellectual, instruction was given by him; being engaged for a number of years in school teaching, in which calling he inculcated none but the strictest principles of morality. Being deemed worthy in every sense, he was several years ago chosen by the church, to the ministry; but, for reason best known to himself, he never fully entered upon the work, always, no doubt, esteeming "others better than himself." He, however, when meeting with us, where there was but one of the ministering brethren present, very often rendered us very valuable assistance, as his words were always inpressive, to the point, and full of love and meaning. His liberal hand was ever ready to aid in defraying the necessary expenses of the church; and his charity extended to the subjects thereof. His deliberations were always mature, and his counsels safe. In a word, we realize that a piliar of the church has fallen. Everywhere we miss him: in our councils, at our assemblies around the congregational altar, around the communion table. His countenance usually wore an impressive smile, expressive of a heart filled with the love of Jesus; and it is said, that, after the 'pale messenger" had done his work, it was still retained.

We now close our brief and imperfect memorial; knowing that "the half has not been told;" hoping and praying, as we do so, that we who mourn the loss of a brother in Christ, together with all his relatives and friends, may imitate his good examples, that, in the trying hour of death, we, like him, may be found praying to God our heavenly Father; and with him be able to say to friends around, "I am ready and willing to die;" adapting unto ourselves the language of one of old, "If I must die, let me die the death of the righteous, and let my latter end be like his."

Franklin, Iowa.

BROTHER HENRY:—I have been a reader of your paper for the last six years, and have often been made to rejoice while looking over the pages of the COMPANION, and there seeing so much good council from brethren and sisters. We would be glad to hear through the C. F C., of some of our aged fathers, such as Elder Fox, of the Philadelphia church, and others of our aged brethren. It is desired that Elder Fox give an historical account of his ministerial labors.

Sister Eby is much missed in the family and in the church, she being ever ready to aid in the Master's cause; but we trust she has gone to reap the reward of the children of God.

ALLEN BOYER.

[Visitor please copy.]

Near Pontiac, Livingston county, Ills, LYDIA L. HOOVER, is the daughter of brother Samuel and sister Elizabeth. She was a bright little girl, about nine years of age who, while her parents were in the field husking corn, was left with the other children of the family in the house. She being the oldest girl it fell to her lot to prepare dinner. Being thus engaged her dress took fire and struck a blaze before she knew it. Soon as she saw it, she called to her brother, about two years older, who was in another room. In the meanwhile she ran out of doors; but in a moment after she was exposed to the open air, her little body was wrapped in flames, consequently the boy could not help her. She then ran to the field some 30 rods distant, exclaiming, "O mother! I'm burned nearly to death." The frightened mother immediately ran to meet her, found all her raiment burned off, except shoes and stockings, which were still burning. She was immediately taken to the house, a physician called, but of no avail. At this time she seemed to suffer but little pain. After about 10 hours she dozed to sleep, and thus calmly crossed the gloomy waters of the Jordan of death.

O children! Remember that God is calling thousands upon thousands of children to eternity; and oh, remember that you must die, and that Jesus shed a drop of his precious blood for you; that he tasted death that you might live, and that he sitteth on the right hand of a just God, interceding for you. Yes, methinks he is saying, "O my Father, may it be thy will to spare that young man a few days longer, that he may turn from his evils. That young lady, who so much loves the pleasures of this world, oh! wilt thou have compassion on her? for she does not know that she is so near the brink of eternity." Funeral services by the writer from John 1: 29

JONATHAN SWIHART.

In the Yellow Creek, Bedford county, Pa., Nov. 27th, sister MARY SMITH, sister of Elder Jacob Miller, after intense suffering of about 5 or 6 weeks, aged 64 years 9 months and 17 days. Funeral occasion improved by the Brethren, to a large concourse of people, from Revelations 14: 12, 13. Disease, Gastric Enteritis complicated with inaction of the liver.
